Jobless To Rise In B.C.

B.C.'s economic growth will slow this year and the number of unemployed will rise, says a provincial government report released Tuesday.

The ministry of economic development's annual review of economic activity says that the expected rise in the province's gross domestic product — which measures total domestic output of goods and services — will be between 3.5 and 3.7 per cent this year.

That is below the 1978 figure of 4.2 per cent for B.C. Last year the national average was 3.7 per cent.

The slow growth will also effect job prospects.

The report says that the number of available jobs in the province will rise by about three per cent in 1979 but the labor force will grow even faster, so there will be a greater number of unemployed by the end of the year.

In February, B.C.'s unemployment rate jumped to 8.5 per cent, up from 8.2 per cent in the previous month, countering a national trend which saw the rate fall from 8.1 per cent in January to 7.9 per cent. There were 112,000 unemployed in B.C. last month.

The government report says the crucial question in this year's economic picture is how the province will adjust to a 14.5-per-cent increase in the price of Arab crude oil.

$30 Million Flaw Found In Dam Cost

A major weakness in bedrock which contractors say could boost the cost of the $1.5 billion Revelstoke Dam by an extra $30 million has been discovered below the dam site in southeastern B.C.

B.C.Hydro said Tuesday far more rock now must be excavated and more concrete poured than originally planned.

Hydro spokesmen said they could not estimate the cost of the extra work because it might prejudice the bidding process.

However, contractors estimated the cost, for both excavation and concrete at upwards of $30 million.

However, engineers called that estimate "a little high."

The exact cost will not be known until after May 1 when bids on the concrete work are opened and examined.

Hydro spokesman John Sexton said: "The extra excavation is expected to total about 280,000 cubic yards of rock with a corresponding increase in the amount of concrete required to build the dam and power house."

Sexton said bids on the work had been due April 4 but have been extended to May 1 because additional information has been added to the bidding instructions to include the extra excavation.

One construction company executive said the cost of excavating the additional soft rock could run to about $15 a yard.

He said cost of the extra concrete needed to replace the rock could be in the range of $50 to $90 a yard. This was the basis of the estimate of $30 million in added costs.

The cost of the dam with four turbines in place is estimated at $1.5 billion.

The project is expected to go on stream with four units in 1983.

Hydro would not say whether the extra work will delay completion.

The dam was given the go-ahead only after a prolonged public dispute involving the Society for Pollution and Environmental Control (SPEC), which opposed its construction on the grounds Hydro's growth projections were inflated.

Ottawa Wants Vitamin Ads Curbed on TV

BURLINGTON, Ont. (CP) — The federal drug directorate is proposing limits be placed on the claims vitamin advertisers can make on television, the head of the directorate says.

Dr. Bert Liston said in a telephone interview from Ottawa that his office, part of the health and welfare department, also is investigating the possibility of putting vitamins with a high iron content on the restricted drugs list.

The recommendations have been forwarded to Health Minister Monique Begin.

If she accepts the recommendations the public will be asked for suggestions and comments to develop a national policy, Liston said.

Ruth Bayne, head of Burlington's poison information centre, said that since Jan. 1, the centre at Joseph Brant Hospital in this community southwest of Toronto has admitted 19 cases of vitamin overdose among children aged two to five, about double the usual rate.

She said none of the children was seriously ill, but there was a potential for tragedy.

Last month, Miss Bayne wrote several letters to authorities in Ottawa calling for vitamin pills to be made prescription drugs and she asked that a ban be placed on TV advertising of vitamins aimed at children.

Liston said he basically agreed with Miss Bayne's arguments about vitamins, but he said he has not heard of any outbreak of vitamin poisoning of children.

Miss Bayne said repeated massive overdoses of vitamin A can cause brain damage and repeated overdoses of vitamin D can cause bone deterioration.

High concentrations of iron can cause internal bleeding and even one overdose can be lethal, she said.

"Literally it burns a hole in the stomach."

W. R. Wensley, registrar of the Ontario College of Physicians and Surgeons, said the vitamin situation should be watched closely.

But Wensley said the college does not advocate that vitamins be prescription drugs.

The college wants vitamins with doses stronger than a dietary supplement, along with a small number of prescription vitamins, to be sold only in pharmacies, he said.

Four Loggers Arrested

By MARK HUME
Times Staff

Four loggers have been arrested in the Queen Charlotte Islands along with an administrator for Q.C. Timber Ltd. in a dispute over a tract of timber recently put off limits by federal fisheries.

A spokesman for the company said today that three of the fallers and the administrator were arrested in camp Tuesday night.

The fourth faller had been arrested Monday.

The company spokesman said he understood the administrator was under armed guard at the logging camp.

Meanwhile about ten women, some of them the wives of the arrested loggers, picketed federal fisheries offices in Queen Charlotte City at noon today and paraded through the streets carrying placards.

The company spokesman said he wasn't sure whether or not the remaining loggers at the camp planned to return to the restricted area and resume cutting.

A fisheries official in the Queen Charlottes said that the fallers had been charged with undertaking work that resulted in the destruction of fish habitat.

It is understood that the company administrator has been charged with counselling an offence.

Q.C. Timber Ltd. is also facing charges.

Under the federal Fisheries Act the accused could face fines of up to $50,000 or two years in jail.

At issue is a 40-acre tract of timber over-looking Riley Creek, a salmon stream on Rennell Sound.

The fisheries department and the provincial forest service have been battling for jurisdictional control of the area.

"We'er caught up in an intergovernmental dispute," said the Q.C. Timber spokesman. "And a lot of little people seem to be paying an awfully high price for it."

Air Ban Threat Hollow?

OTTAWA (FP) — The Canadian government "does not expect" that American authorities will follow through with a threat to block Air Canada's introduction of bargain-rate flights to the United States, says Transport minister Otto Lang.

But Lang conceded in the Commons Tuesday that only American authorities could say with certainty what will happen because the matter "is in their hands."

Officials of the U.S. Civil Aeronautics Board are currently deliberating whether to limit their displeasure to the "dissatisfaction" notice or go all the way and actallly block the flights.

Conservative MP Jack Murta (Lisgar) told Lang his comments were "cold comfort" to the people who hoped to fill 147,000 seats on Air Canada flights to the U.S. during bargain fare period.

U.S. authorities are said to be unhappy over Ottawa's rejection in recent months of several proposals for cheaper cross-border flights by American air crarriers.

Begin Tough Talk Stirs All-Out War Demands

Times News Services

The Saudi Arabian press, which invariably reflects government thinking, called today for an all-out Arab war against Israel to regain Jerusalem and other occupied Arab territory.

The outburst of editorial wrath followed a forceful statement in the Israeli parliament in Jerusalem on Tuesday by Prime Minister Menachem Begin as he opened debate on the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty.

Begin said Israel will never accept the re-division of Jerusalem or relinquish its status as "Israel's eternal capital," never withdraw to its pre-1967 borders or ever allow the establishment of a Palestinian state.

Begin's tough talk about the fate of Jewish-occupied territories also nearly caused a brawl in the Egyptian Parliament.

His vow not to return to Israel's pre-1967 borders rubbed raw nerves in Cairo, where members of the Egyptian Parliament met today to discuss the treaty.

Independent member Farouk Metwalli urged condemnation of Begin's statements, which he said were "grave and have an even more grave significance."

Ahmed Nasser, another member known for his leftist leanings, took the floor to denounce Begin and ignored an order from the speaker to be silent.

A front-page editorial in Al Jezira called on all Arab states to prepare for a long and continuous war and to allow the Palestinian resistance to fight on all fronts "until they turn the occupied lands into a blazing inferno for the enemy."

Similar calls for preparations for a "long war" were also voiced in radical Iraq.

Al Thawra, the official newspaper of the ruling Socialist Baath party, said:

"The Arab masses must change any war that Israel launched from a limited one, as Israel would like, to a liberation war, whose duration and severity would be determined by the Arab masses and not by the Zionist enemy."

Khomeini Tries To Calm Kurds

SANANDAJ, Iran (CP) — Heavy fighting raged in the streets of this western Kurdish city near the Iraqi border today as Ayatollah Khomeini sent religious leaders to the scene on a desperate mission to secure peace.

Kurdish rebels surrounding the 28th Iranian Infantry Division barracks exchanged rifle and machinegun fire with the besieged troops for the third consecutive day after yet another ceasefire attempt broke down.

As mortar fire burst over the town, Kurdish guerrillas dashed from tree to tree up the main avenue, firing rapid automatic rounds toward the army garrison.

It was impossible to calculate the casualties. But the Kurdish fighters reported 80 of their own men killed since the fighting began last Sunday night and that 20 soldiers had died.

The Voice of the Revolution radio in Teheran said Ayatollah Khomeini's chief religious representative in the capital and other Moslem leaders had been sent to Sanandaj.

It said they were going "to investigate the situation and attend to the demands of the Kurdish people," who have been pressing for autonomy ever since the Shah was toppled last month.

Khomeini and most Iranians belong to the Shiite sect of Islam. The Kurds are almost all Sunnis.

Rhoodie Points to Vorster

By LEONARD DOWNIE

LONDON (WP) — Former South African information official Eschel Rhoodie says he has documentary proof that the entire South African cabinet knew and approved of an illegal multi-million-dollar campaign to buy foreign and domestic support for South Africa's apartheid government.

In a BBC television interview taped for broadcast here Wednesday night, Rhoodie said he had "certain key documentation containing signatures of, for example," John Vorster, the former prime minister, who is now president of South Africa, and Owen Horwood, the finance minister.

Rhoodie gave the BBC a photostat copy of this document to present on television, which Rhoodie said should lead to the resignation of the present prime minister.

South African government officials today strongly denied earlier allegations made by Rhoodie.

Prime Minister Pieter Botha, who promised to resign if it is shown he knew that the government misused taxpayer money to bolster its image abroad, said the scandal has no connection with the murders of Dr. and Mrs. Robert Smit.

"Any inference that there is a connection between the two would be totally wrong," a spokesman for Botha said.

As the influence-buying scandal unfolded in South Africa in recent weeks, Botha vowed to resign and call new national elections if it was proven that anyone in his cabinet was involved.

Rhoodie, who is hiding in Europe from the South African authorities said in the BBC interview that he also had "safely locked away in a bank vault somewhere in Europe" another "massive document" detailing all the "secret projects over the past five years, including current projects," in which South African money was spent to buy foreign support.

He said this document contained "a summary of the projects, including who received what and the names of people in the Fight for Roe Bankrupting

VANCOUVER (CP) — Herring roe processors, caught between the record prices being paid to fishermen and the cost of processing the roe, say there is a good chance they will lose money this season.

One processor said his company could not break even at $15 U.S. a pound for roe, while a Japanese purchaser said the prices the processors expect are simply too high.

"We are willing to pay $10 or $11 U.S. right now," he said. "It is, of course, dependent on what the Japanese market will bear. But I think at that price, the processors are not going to make any profit."

Another buyer said the price will be determined by what the market in Japan will support, and that has not yet been determined.

One processor said the reason for the higher prices was too many processors going after too few fish. This year's catch is approximately 30,000 tons of herring, or roughly 3,000 tons of roe, well below the federal fisheries' projection of a 60,000-ton catch for 1979.

He said this has drastically driven up the price the processors are paying to fishermen on the fishing grounds. Some fishermen were asking as much as $4,000 a ton.

Probe Opens on Leaking Waste Sites

WASHINGTON (AP) — A House of Representatives investigations subcommittee opened hearings Wednesday on the risks from hundreds of waste sites in the United States which are believed to be causing illnesses, some fatal, among people who live nearby.

One subcommittee member, Representative Albert Gore (Dem. Tenn.), said hazardous waste disposal "is the most significant environmental health problem of this decade."

The Environmental Protection Agency, Gore said, "has been dragging its feet" in finding ways to clean up existing dumps and prevent creation of new ones.

In Wednesday's hearing, the House commerce committee's subcommittee on oversight and investigations focused on the effects of the pesticide mirex and thousands of pounds of the toxic chemical dioxin dumped between 1953 and the mid-1960s by the Hooker Chemical Corp. at the Hyde Park landfill in Niagara Falls.

Gore said the site "may be the most perilous yet discovered."

Hooker is the same firm which dumped chemicals in the Love Canal in Niagara Falls, a dumping ground which gained notoriety earlier when nearby residents reported serious health problems.

Among those testifying Wednesday were Dr. James A. Dunlop; Fred Armagost of Niagara, and Armagost's daughter, Mrs. Jasper, who appeared holding her own daughter, blue-eyed Susie.

Dunlop said that since 1975 he has treated six of Armagost's grandchildren, all of whom live near Bloody Creek, a waterway which drains from the Hyde Park dumping site and runs through several residential areas.

The doctor, a pediatrician, said all six children suffer from repeated illnesses of the upper respiratory system and often have trouble breathing.

He said Susie Jasper has been in hospital three times with pneumonia. An uncle to Susie, Wayne Armogast, suffers serious lung problems and has been forced to quit his job, Dunlop said.

In the area where the Armagost family lives, Dunlop said, "there are a lot of health problems which just can't be explained."

The doctor said he provides adrenaline shots and other remedial treatment but can find no cure to the health problems of the family members and other neighbors he has treated for similar illnesses.

Gore said Hooker dumped thousands of tons of toxic chemicals in metal drums at the Hyde Park site by digging shallow ditches and then covering them with bulldozers.

Many of the drums have split open, allowing the contents to drain into the creek.

Rhoodie Widens Allegations field," complete with "code numbers, code names, file numbers, amounts of money sent" and the names of recipients.

South African newspapers have quoted Rhoodie and associates of his as saying that money was given to politicians and others in positions of influence in the United States, Europe and Africa in a "propaganda war in which no rules or regulations would count."

In the BBC interview, Rhoodie acknowledged that he ran the influence-buying campaign, but with the complete approval of the rest of South Africa's top officials.

In addition to the documentary proof, Rhoodie said, "being the man in charge, my memory serves as a record, and I have dictated everything I know onto tapes. I also have other tapes that were not dictated."

Rhoodie did not elaborate on just what those other tapes contained, according to David Dimbleby, the BBC reporter who interviewed Rhoodie. Dimbleby described the interview to reporters here Tuesday and played for them an audio recording of a small portion of it.

Dimbleby said Rhoodie discussed in general the subject of payments made to politicians in the United States and Europe, but he would not say whether Rhoodie mentioned names or specific "projects."

As of Tuesday Dimbleby said he and BBC producer David Harrison had not yet finally decided which portions of their six-hour interview with Rhoodie would be broadcast tonight.

Rhoodie had offered to reveal more documents and some contents of the tapes if BBC paid him $200,000, Dimbleby and Harrison said, but they refused. "He was told that was ridiculous, said Dimbleby, who emphasized that BBC paid Rhoodie nothing.

A South African government commission investigating the influence-buying scandal reported in December that Rhoodie and his boss, former Information Minister Cornelius Mulder, and former South African security chief Gen. Hendrik Van Der Bergh were primarily responsible for the influence-buying scheme. Mulder was forced to resign from the Cabinet and Parliament. Van Der Bergh had already retired from government.

The government commission said about $74 million was spent between 1973 and 1978, about half of which financed The Citizen, a pro-apartheid newspaper secretly set up by the government in Johannesburg. The commission said it could not reveal how the other $37 million was spent because it would endanger South Africa's national security and its relations with other countries.

That Old Swede Just a Fib

Times News Services

OTTAWA — Participaction Canada admitted Tuesday that the notion that the average 60-year-old Swede was fitter than a 30-year-old Canadian was a myth made up by the organization when it introduced televison, radio and newspaper ads comparing the two in 1974.

"There was no hard statistical or hard and fast evidence showing a 60-year-old Swede was fitter than a 30-year-old Canadian but there was a general picture Canadians were not as in good shape as they should be," a federal Sports Department official said.

"It wasn't completely false but it was basically a catchy slogan and got people interested."

Participaction Canada is now promoting a new series of ads — Fitness Now — that says Canadians are not as fit as we should be.

"We're getting away from the notion that Canadians are an unfit, flabby lot," Sports Minister Iona Campagnolo said Tuesday in announcing the new campaign. She told reporters Canadian men now can expect to live one-tenth of a year longer than Swedish men and Canadian women live three-tenths of year longer than Swedish women.

"A study comissioned by Fitness and Amateur Sport that rated physical fitness between the residents of Saskatoon, Sask., and Umea, Sweden, also showed more Canadians turned out to bicycle, jog and swim," she said.

"This shows the participation level is better and the fitness of Canadians is better than in Sweden — obviously the 60-year-old example is a myth."

She also announced creation of a four-man task force to make recommendations for a national fitness and recreation policy.

Campagnolo said she expected a final report on a nation-wide tour by the task force within a year and said a separate recreation directorate would be set up in her department.

A discussion paper released by Campagnolo said recreation planning was disorganized and there was need for greater coordination of recreation among the three levels of government.

Bell-Bottoms Wrung By Chinese Press

HONG KONG (Reuter) — Chinese teen-agers have been warned against letting bell-bottom trousers, fancy hair styles and other "decadent" Western fashions distract them from their studies.

Articles in the China Youth News quoted by the official Chinese news agency Xinhua (Hsinhua) said young people should be more analytical of Western lifestyles.

"We ought to import science and technology," said one commentary. "As for the 'Western lifestyles' we should be more analytical.

"The spiritual and material things that represent the corrupt and decadent side of the capitalist society should be banned."

The article questioned whether youngsters devoted to China's modernization "will have a lot of time to spend on such things as hairstyles and bell-bottom trousers."

Another commentary said Chinese youth should study science to speed up modernization rather than "pay too much attention to being fashionable."

Her Millions Went To the Milkman. . .

An 88-year-old Montreal priest was angry when his millionaire sister died, leaving most of the money to her friendly milkman. But Rev. Charles-Edouard Ouellette lost out Tuesday when Quebec Superior Court turned down his bid to have his sister's will annulled. Blanche Ouellette, the priest's sister, felt lonely and abandoned following the death of another sister with whom she had been living, and she got in touch with her former milkman, Laurent Pepin, who had always been friendly towards her. Pepin and his wife provided a home for Blanche, who was then 83, and looked after her until she died two years later.

One of Charlie Smith's roots has been uncovered and the whole tree may come topping down on the man who claims to be the oldest living person in the U.S. with 136 rings on his trunk. As with many a man far younger, Charlie's undoing could be a little piece of paper called a marriage licence. According to The Guinness Book of World Records and one of its editors David Boehm, Smith is only about 103 . . . a mere tad alongside those Hunzas who rack up a century-plus in nearly every inning without even thinking about it. "He blew it when he got married at 53," said Boehm in New York, explaining wht the Barstow, Fla., resident is losing his coveted place in the record book. Boehm won't say where he obtained the marriage licence, however, he is adamant that it shrinks the tall tales Smith has long regaled the world with such as being an outlaw riding with Jesse James, a detective and a bounty hunter as well as vivid memories of being lured aboard a slaver bound for New Orleans with promises of "a fritter tree with syrup for sap" when he was an African boy of 12 in 1854. The U.S. Social Security Administration in Washington and spokesmen for the Barstow Convalescent Centre where Smith now lives both maintain that slave records and bone tests both show Smith to be as old as he claims. Says Ruth Aiple, administrator of the home, "a marriage licence when you're over 50 doesn't mean very much anyway."

Chess grandmaster Victor Korchnoi defeated one of North America's best known psychics in 14 moves on Tuesday, but credited his opponent with anticipating some of his ideas. Korchnoi, in New York for a series of exhibitions, and Robert Byrne, a leading U.S. chess correspondent, were pitted against The Amazing Kreskin. Kreskin, playing his two opponents simultaneously, was blindfolded and was not told what moves they were making. Kreskin said he would try to read their minds and to pit Korchnoi and Byrne against one another. However, Korchnoi checkmated the psychic after 14 moves and Byrne checkmated Kreskin shortly afterwards on the 23rd move. After the match, Korchnoi said he was impressed by Kreskin's ability to anticipate some of his thoughts, but said the psychic underestimated the thinking processes of a top chess master.

HODGE . . as Captain Video

The hero of millions of starry-eyed children two decades ago, who knew him only as Captain Video, Albert Hodge has been found dead in the small Manhattan hotel room where he lived alone with his memories. The 67-year-old actor, who has been virtually out of work since his science fiction kidvid show went off the air in 1956, had been living alone at the George Washington Hotel for the past four years, according to a clerk. On Monday, police discovered his body in his room, which reportedly was filled with memorabilia of his career. It has lain unclaimed at the Bellevue morgue since that time. There is no mention of Hodge in many books listing celebrities of early television, and the film of his old shows was destroyed — reportedly sold for their chemical content at 7 cents a pound.

Ever doubt the fact that nothing is greater than a mother's love? Take the case of Alma Ryan, of Lowell, Fla. She went to jail on a drug smuggling conviction rather than reveal her son's hiding place. Mrs. Ryan, 59, was paroled Tuesday after six months in the slammer. When federal agents scooped up six tons of marijuana in a raid last summer, they discovered that the boat carrying the contraband was registered in her name. In court Mrs. Ryan pleaded no contest to charges of marijuana importation. She told the judge she suspected something illegal was going on but was afraid to ask until a couple of weeks before the raid. Finally she confronted her son by a previous marriage, Fred Ingram, and her second husband with her suspicions and they told her they were smuggling. Her husband, William Ryan, was held on charges of importing and selling marijuana but jumped $50,000 bail last August and is still missing. Ingram disappeared immediately after the raid. The judge offered Mrs. Ryan probation if she would reveal her son's whereabouts. She refused. "I mean, a mother, no matter what your child does, he's still your child and you love him. Right or wrong ... I love my son," she told the judge.

WASHINGTON — Rolls-Royce, Excalibur and Maserati are exempted from miles-per-gallon standards, but a U.S. public interest group wants that changed.

The Centre for Auto Safety says special treatment for luxury cars undermines public support for fuel economy standards. It asked a court Tuesday to force the government to fine the manufacturers $50 a mile for each mile the cars fall below prescribed standards.

John Hubbard, a spokesman for the centreer, warned that fuel economy standards might lose public support "when drivers realize that while they drive a small car at 55 mph, the rich can drive an exotic, gas-guzzling, high performance car without paying even a token penalty for that privilege."

Law provides that 1978 model cars get at least an average 18 miles per gallon. The three luxury cars get about 11 miles per gallon, but are exempt because so few are sold.

Meanwhile, it was announced that President Jimmy Carter will address the country March 29 on his new energy policies.

House Speaker Thomas O'Neill said Carter did not reveal any details of his energy plan, and that he was under the impression that Carter had not yet made up his mind on many matters. Carter said he would confer with key members of Congress before formulating a final plan.

Deregulation that works

Victoria city council is again grappling with the problems posed by towing companies that remove the cars of overparked motorists to a compound where they can be retrieved only after paying a hefty fee. Like councils in many other cities, aldermen are trying to draft regulations to cover questions of damage by towtruck operators, improper towaways and a raft of other difficulties.

Perhaps they should take a lesson from San Francisco which earlier this year found a simple expedient for dealing with the problem: it simply abolished towaways from city streets.

Like Victoria, San Francisco operated a system under which persons parking on certain streets during the rush hours were towed away to ensure a smoother flow of traffic. And like Victoria, city officials had been plagued with problems for years.

Through a series of political protests and court cases, a plethora of regulations had grown up governing towing. A city official had to check the car for previous damage before it could be towed away. He had to take an inventory of the contents of the car's interior. He had to supervise the departure of the tow truck with the vehicle.

The whole procedure had become so complicated that the officials issuing the towaway tickets could write only one or two an hour.

Late in 1978 the city thought one solution might be to switch towing companies, but at the last minute the financing for the new company fell apart. As a result towaways were abandoned, more or less by default.

But instead of searching for another company, the city raised the fines for parking in the former towaway zones from $10 to $25. And it concentrated its parking enforcement officers in those zones during rush hours. Because tickets could be written so quickly, the chances of catching someone improved drastically.

It has been successful. The higher fines plus the high chances of getting caught have proved a real deterrent to those who would overpark. San Francisco officials now say it's unlikely they will bring back the old towaway system.

It seems a good example of deregulation that works.

The Army's fund drive

Its name — Salvation Army — suggests an otherworldly concern for spiritual matters, to the neglect of the world's "real" problems and pressing daily concerns. Not so. The Salvation Army has a fine and well-deserved reputation for ministering to the urgent physical needs of the down and out.

It provides hot meals and clean clothes and a temporary refuge for the alcoholics and drifters and others who have been overlooked or neglected or who don't fit the molds of the more traditional welfare agencies.

For nearly a century it's been carrying out this mission in Victoria, lately working in several dilapidated buildings on Yates Street. Considering the age and condition of the structures — cracked walls, cramped quarters, wasted space — the Salvation Army has truly worked miracles.

Now within sight is a modern centre that will provide the room and facilities to help twice as many alcoholics as before, more beds for transient accommodation and space for an enlarged workshop and repair centre for the furniture, clothing and other goods which move through its second-hand store.

The cost of the 53,000-foot Harbor Lights complex is $3 million. The Salvation Army has provided half of the required funds, and the B.C. government has promised another $1 million. The remaining $500,000 the Salvation Army is attempting to raise from Victorians in a public fund-raising drive.

It is a hackneyed and well-worn phrase, but the Sally Ann campaign is a worthy cause in all its definitions.

Ha, ha

Prime Minister Trudeau came out to Vancouver last week and tried out his election strategy, which mixes equal parts of scorn for Joe Clark with ridicule of his policies, delivered with the amused detachment of a professor cutting down an academic rival.

Then he flew back to Ottawa and teased the parliamentary press gallery on the weekend with an election call, and reporters had to wait until Monday to find out from an aide in the PM's office that he was just "spoofing."

He seems to be deriving an awful lot of fun out of running for re-election. Maybe there's a joke the rest of us have missed. Tell us about the Liberals' record in office during the past decade, Mr. Prime Minister, and perhaps we can all join in a good long laugh. Or cry.

RICHARD GWYN

'Gov't loves us too much'

OTTAWA — These days, business has this intriguing problem. It is being loved too much by government, or, to be more precise, it is being loved too visibly by government.

Only a few years ago, business felt itself beleaguered, misunderstood and mistrusted.

There were the socialists, in power in British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, and knocking on the doors in Ontario. There was Prime Minister Trudeau, musing about the need for "a new society" in which "government is going to take a larger role in running our institutions."

As bad, for business, was that the public seemed to agree. Surveys showed that the public's esteem for business hadn't been lower since the Depression of the 1930s, and indeed was little higher than the public's opinion about Big Government and Big Labor. Corporations were attacked for everything from ripping off consumers to polluting the environment.

On their last legs

In a typical expression of businessmen's hurt feelings, Bill Twaits, former chairman of Imperial Oil, drew cheers when he told a corporate seminar in the spring of 1977 that the private sector had been "kicked around by legislation, regulation and downright abuse." Earlier, E. G. Burton, chairman of Simpsons Ltd., warned that because of government interference, "the market system may not survive much longer."

The market system seems no healthier today than a few years ago. Corporations have been seized by the urge to merge rather than by an urge to hustle in the marketplace. Last year, the number of mergers soared to 139 compared to 254 in 1975, despite the evidence that corporate concentration lowers efficieney. (In seven of the 12 most concentrated industries in 1975 the largest firms turned in worse results in terms of return on sales and on equity than did the smaller ones.)

The change instead is that government, instead of kicking around business, now is spoon-feeding it. Ford Motors got the first dollop — $68 million from Ottawa and the Ontario governments. The pulp and paper industry has got the latest, and the largest, slice — $235 million from Ottawa, with, as a side dish, $100 million from Ontario.

Other winners of the country's largest lottery have been the shipbuilding industry, into which Ottawa has pumped money, and the textile industry, which Ottawa protects with quotas against low-cost imports. Among the group, the pulp and paper industry stands apart. It gets the most money at a time when it itself is making the most money in its history — a record

$716 million last year, an increase of more than 100 per cent from 1977. Mills are operating at 99 per cent of capacity, and the price of newsprint has just been hiked $25 to $345 a short ton.

"We welcome the government's understanding of the real economic conditions of our industry, and in particular its recognition that the performance of the last year masks our underlying problems," said Donald Lanskail, chairman of the B.C. Council of Forest Industries when I interviewed him in Vancouver.

"We don't like the method, though," Lanskail added. "Direct grants amount to a subsidy to the inefficient."

Here's the rub in the affair. The pulp and paper industry's profits last year were a windfall shaken loose by the devalued dollar. During the past decade, the industry's rate of return has been 6.4 per cent, which anyone could have bettered by buying Canada Savings Bonds. The U.S. market, which takes 70 per cent of our exports, may dip down this year. In the meantime, competition is quickening from fast-growing U.S. southern pine (25-35 years to maturity compared to 75 years in B.C.).

Yet government handouts do subsidize equally companies which have laughed on their way to the bank and those which have ploughed their money back into new equipment. To illustrate what happens when government gives without strings attached, most textile companies have used import quotas to increase their prices rather than to increase their sales. At the same time that polyester-cotton fabric from Japan has jumped from 75 cents a yard to $1.30, the Canadian price of the same fabric has climbed from 72 cents a yard to $1.20.

Lanskail's proposed alternative, to direct grants (up to one-[illegible] cost of new machinery), is "tax incentives."

New Democrat leader Ed Broadbent's proposed alternative is, as you might expect, to get the government into the boardrooms of the nation. Broadbent calls Ottawa's handout, "totally irresponsible." In return for giving, says Broadbent, the government should get, as in Scandinavia, specific pledges of new, job-creating investment over and above investments that would have been made anyway.

The odds are long that after the next election, Broadbent will hold the balance of power. If that happens, the odds are about as long that industry, which a few years ago worried that the government paid it too little attention, will worry even more that the government is paying it too much attention.

Welfare figures

Human Resources Minister Grace McCarthy (Numbers Are Down, March 13) is all upset about my letter to the editor relating to the number of "employable" persons on social assistance and she refers to the "true figure" in her news release of Feb. 21. I have now obtained a copy of this four page release and guess what, nowhere in the release or in the four pages of financial figures attached does it give one single statistic as to the number of persons on social assistance!

The figure of 40,000 employable "persons" was obtained after the press release from the information department of Mrs. McCarthy's Ministry. But according to Mrs. McCarthy, they gave the wrong figure and included "dependents" so they say that as at Dec. 31 there were 23,968 "employable persons" plus their dependants.

Mr. Vander Zalm, the former minister, told the legislature on Jan. 13, 1976 in a written answer to question No. 67 on the order paper that on Dec. 31, 1975 there were 22,413 "employable persons" plus dependants. So if Mrs. McCarthy's latest figures are not erroneous then from December, 1975 to December, 1978 "employable persons" on social assistance increased by 1,551.

In her letter Mrs. McCarthy describes an "average reduction" of 1,391 as "dramatic" so I guess this "actual increase" of 1,551 can fairly be described as a "dramatic" increase under Social Credit.

The minister also takes umbrage over her $36 million "overrun" spent on social assistance being added to her total department expenditure. Why, it was she who taught me "overruns" were a terrible catastrophe only wrought by the NDP. Now she says they don't mean a thing and that underspending by cutting services in the rest of your ministry will make up for the $36 million "overrun."

All very confusing but at least Mrs. McCarthy doesn't dispute that there are some 125,000 person on social assistance under age 65, and she will spend well over half a billion dollars in the present fiscal year plus an increase next year. A far cry from the election promises on this subject. — W. Wood, 1518 Haultain Street.

Lively socialists

Lorraine Locherty's reference to the Socialist Party of Canada in her report on UVic's Debate and Speech Society venture at Hillside Mall was inaccurate and condescending. (City's Great Talkers Gagged on 75¢ a Minute, Feb. 28).

She said: "The debate provided a convenient public platform. A Socialist party of Canada member used it to preach the evils of capitalism." In fact three members spoke there, the one on Saturday attracting a group of 15 or 20 interested listeners. His contribution livened up an otherwise dead situation for the student debaters, and in part resulted in the attendent professor inviting the Socialist party member to be a judge in future UVic debates.

Ms. Locherty's use of the word preaching suggests religious mythology. This leads to the observation that the real struggle that goes on in society, the one that the dominant class has always won against the propertiless majority by a comfortable margin is a war of ideas. The social problems endured by the workers are not myths that need to be preached to them. Not only are the ordinary people aware of these problems, but their lives are largely consumed by fruitless attempts to cope with them. In this framework, it is not surprising to see that she attaches more importance to tinkering with effects than with examining the source of these problems.

The Socialist party speakers were merely required to reveal this social source and the logical solution as the party name suggests. — J. T. Lambie, 641 Jones Terrace.

Look at the facts

Mr. Charles Doyle's letter to the editor under the heading of We Want Sewers? (Times, March 5) is a good example of gross misrepresentation of a very important issue. He refers to an information meeting Saanich council held at Claremont high school on Feb. 22. The meeting was called by Mayor Mel Couvelier to discuss sewage disposal problems in the Cordova Bay area. Mr. Doyle says the main issue at this meeting was concern for population density and not sewers, and that the majority of people spoke against sewers as leading to a high density population. He should review the newspaper coverage of this meeting; he will find nothing referring to population density.

To set the records straight, the only people who spoke against sewers were five members of the Cordova Bay Association planning committee who are strongly opposed to any change in this area and will do everything possible to maintain the "status quo" including minimizing the fact that there is a serious potential health hazard in the area. One elderly gentleman gave us a report on pollution in the Sargasso Sea and several other ladies expressed some concern for the environment. These same people did not seem concerned that every creek flowing onto our beach is a sewer outfall of a sort.

If Mr. Doyle intends to make any more public statements, he would do a greater service by sticking to the facts. Regional health officer Dr. Allan Arneil and Pollution Control Board head John Dew-Jones made it quite clear that as long as there was effluent on the surface, there was a health hazard. They both agreed they would be loath to track down faulty septic tanks and force the culprits to make expensive repairs, only to find that sewers were needed in the very near future. Jack Armstrong of school board 63 stated that if they were forced to spend $200,000 to fix up Claremont high school, they would, but the cost would only be passed on to the taxpayer and it probably wouldn't solve the problem.

In 1974, Saanich municipality paid $10,000 of the taxpayers money to Thurber Consultants for a pollution and groundwater study of the Cordova Bay area. The report was published in December, 1975 and conclusively pointed out the need for sewers and storm drains. It proved without a doubt that we had a pollution problem. This survey was done five years ago and never made public, and yet the Cordova Bay Association and Saanich municipality have conducted two "meaningless" surveys asking the local residents if they were satisfied with sewage disposal methods. These facts were made public at this meeting by Dr. Allan Arneil, Mr. Dew-Jones and the Thurber report. Sewers are the only long term solution.

Don't let history repeat itself. Look at what is happening in View Royal and the problems the Esquimalt Lagoon area is having with alternate sewage disposal systems. How can any intelligent group of people close their eyes to such glaring facts? — Gerald A. Finestone, 813 Claremont Avenue.

Just the beginning

I want to add my congratulations and support to those Victorians who are responsible for creating a convention centre for the city. Progress seems to come more slowly to Victoria than to many other cities. I think rightly so, because the wrong kinds of change and development could so easily destroy the natural beauty here. However, when change does occur, and is proven to be beneficial and desirable for the community, as in the case of the convention centre, then it is my strong belief that we should all indicate our support for the project and its early opening.

As a businessman, I could be accused of having selfish motivations. So be it. The fact is that I am proud to be a citizen of Victoria, of being allowed the privilege to live on one of nature's most beautiful islands, and I want to see this area protected and developed for the benefit of all mankind.

We must have industry here to provide work, income and stability. Those who think otherwise are deluded and far removed from the realities of life. We need people industries here — tourists are undoubtedly the answer.

Let's get our heads out of the sand and give wholehearted support to the convention centre. — Allen Houghton, 1109 Langley Street.

Save the stamps

You have published of late a few socialist-inspired letters criticizing the premier's announcement of five free shares offered to the people of British Columbia.

Well, it is not easy to reply to socialist writers, as they normally are so convinced that they are right they seldom consider another honest and fair viewpoint.

Those so critical of the cost of the stationery used in the premier's letter may recall that not long ago, during the postal strike, welfare recipients and others getting various sorts of handouts, had to go personally to get their cheques at some offices. If they are so concerned about the cost of stationery and mail (which will be 17 cents on April 1) why haven't they volunteered and offered to collect their cheques such as welfare, unemployment insurance and rental aid? Think of the amount the government will save at a very little inconvenience to people who have plenty of time on their hands and who can go to those offices in their cars.

Only the cheques addressed to handicapped, old age pensioners and maybe family allowances, should be distributed by mail.

I do hope that the socialists will agree, as it will save money to all, whether they are white or blue collars or no collars at all. — E. J. Lattes, 432 - 200 Dallas Road.

'Out there we may find the majesty we need'

By HENRY FAIRLIE
The Washington Post

For the first time since the landing on the moon people seemed moved this month by the exploration of space. By the climax of Voyager I's spectacular rendezvous at Jupiter, there was chatter about it.

But the fact remains that, although poets and scientists, theologians and storytellers have from time immemorial dreamed of such a journey, the exploration of space has seemed to leave most people jaded or stupefied.

"To sail beyond the sunset, and the baths of all the western stars," as Tennyson put it in "Ulysses," There must be some way of getting out there, and how the imagination has tried to think of ways.

The dream has always been a part of the spirit of man, and as science has made the dream possible with its equations, there has also been the fascination in this theorizing, in the leaps that the human mind is able to take.

There was a young lady named Bright,
Whose speed was far greater than light,
She set out one day
In a relative way
And returned on the previous night.

We can now see it all happening, there on our screens, one of the great adventures in man's history, yet we are quickly bored by it. For the moment we were distracted by the fabulousness of Voyager I, but except in our science fiction our interest is not really sustained.

Let us start with the theorizing. On the basis of a few calculations, the human mind launches a vehicle into space. For some 15 months it makes its way to Jupiter, and we ignore it. Then suddenly it looks down on that giant planet, on its belts and its satellites, as if we were first looking over a fence at our neighbor's garden.

Jupiter contains 71 per cent of the total planetary mass in our solar system, whereas the share of our own Earth is no more than 0.22 per cent. Its diameter is 11.2 times that of Earth. Its mass 318 times. Its volume 1,340 times. Its relative density 0.26 times. Its mean distance from the sun 5.2 times. Its orbit period 11.9 times.

How can we not wish to know, now that science makes the knowledge available? And in knowing Jupiter, what will we not know of ourselves?

"The universe is not only queerer than we imagine," said the British scientist, J.B.S. Haldane, "it is queerer than we can imagine." What are we not going to find? Greek philosophy began with speculations about the physical nature of the universe. Those were the obvious first questions to ask. They are questions that stir very early in a child as it lies and gazes up at the stars and the sky. How can it ask, "What am I?" without also asking, "What is all that?"

When science began to answer the questions about the physical nature of the universe, philosophy lost interest in them and retreated, at first slowly and then pell mell, into its own preoccupations. There have been some stirrings lately that suggest that philosophy, recognizing the size of the advances made by science, is now trying to rebuild a bridge between the two realms and tackle some of the questions that science has left in the air.

If this in fact happens, it could not be healthier. Not only philosophy, but theology as well, must be interested. If bishops could imagine the exploration of space in the 17th century, how can they not be interested in the exploration now it has begun?

Is there intelligent life out there? A member of NASA, after looking at the pictures of Jupiter, said to me with conviction, "There must be life as we understand it down there." He was talking of what was shown of Jupiter's atmospheric and geological structures.

Perhaps it was only his first flush of enthusiasm, but I have never known him to exaggerate before. And if there is other life in our system, how can we refuse to try to find it, to try to get in touch and communicate with it? Then what another beginning man will have made in his endless odyssey!

Or suppose that we eventually find that there is no other life in our solar system, and that our sun does in fact shine only for us. Then the Copernican revolution will have been worked and reversed, and we will be back at the centre. How can we not feel the urge, even the urgency to know now that the opportunity is opening? For it is our perception of ourselves that is at stake of what we think our natures to be and not just the accumulation of knowledge about the universe.

Our natures need this exploration. For too long we have desperately been trying to understand them by looking in at ourselves. That inner exploration has come to a full stop. Out there we may find not only the humility, but again the majesty we need.

What makes sun work?

By EARL LANE

Why does the sun shine? That's a child's question, which many physicists and astronomers had once considered pretty well answered. The prodigious amounts of heat and light given off by the sun are assumed to be a result of thermonuclear fusion, a process that weapons builders are able to mimic in a hydrogen bomb.

During the past decade, however, the results from an unusual experiment have led scientists to question whether they really understand what makes the sun work, after all.

The sun's thermonuclear furnace is buried deep within its core. Astronomers are unable to monitor it by conventional observational techniques. The photons of sunlight that arrive at earth, for example, are emitted by only the outermost layers of the sun's mass.

But some curious subatomic particles, called neutrinos, are produced during thermonuclear reactions, which fuse hydrogen atoms to form helium. These neutrinos are able to travel from the sun's core and escape into space. They offer a direct means of checking theories of nuclear energy generation in the sun and other stars like it.

Neutrinos are particles without mass and without charge that can be detected only when they are captured by certain atomic nuclei. Such interactions occur extremely rarely. Consequently, neutrinos are able to penetrate a huge amount of material as though it were not even there.

An ordinary neutrino can pass through the entire sun with only one chance in 10 billion of being absorbed. It can pass through the earth with only one chance in a thousand billion of being abosrbed. Needless to say, neutrinos pass through our bodies by the trillions each day. Neutrinos are so elusive that they have a good chance of traversing the entire universe without interacting with anything.

But Brookhaven National Laboratory scientists, using a detector buried in a gold mine in South Dakota, have devised a way to trap and count solar neutrinos. In doing so, they have measured considerably fewer striking the earth than conventional theories of the sun would predict. (The predicted rate should be about 6 to 7 solar neutrino units, or SNUs, a measure of neutrinos captured per second. Instead, the Brookhaven team has been finding only about 1.8 SNUs.)

The discrepancy has persisted for more than 10 years now, causing grief among the astronomers who draw up models of the sun's behavior and the physicists who try to explain how neutrinos should behave.

And so some new experiments have been proposed to try to settle the problem once and for all. Using detectors made from different materials, scientists will try to measure the flux of solar neutrinos on a broader scale. The status of solar neutrino research was discussed recently during the American Physical Society's annual meeting in New York.

For a time, scientists had hoped that the Brookhaven results would prove to be a temporary aberration, perhaps reflecting a temporary decrease in solar output. As John N. Bahcall, a solar theorist at the Institute for Advanced study in Princeton, N.J., put it, "We had originally hoped that the conflict (between theory and experiment) would go away, but it hasn't gone away. Most of us bit the bullet and decided there are unresolvable differences between what is learned in astronomy courses and what has been observed."

To reconcile some of those differences, scientists have proposed new methods for trapping neutrinos leaving the sun's thermonuclear furnace and for measuring the energy of the detected neutrinos as well.

The Brookhaven experiment, led by chemist Raymond Davis Jr., involves capture of neutrinos in a huge tank containing 100,000 gallons of ordinary cleaning fluid. The fluid contains an isotope of chrice called chlorine 37. Neutrinos captured in the tank produce a radioactive isotope of argon, argon 37, which can be counted once it is extracted from the tank. The Brookhaven team can find and count a few argon atoms in a tank the size of an Olympic swimming pool. These give evidence of neutrinos captured in the tank. (To avoid background effects from cosmic rays, the tank is buried a mile underground in the Homestake Gold Mine in Lead, S.D.)

One of the new experiments will look for the most abundant solar neutrinos, those produced by the main energy-producing fusion reaction in the sun. These abundant neutrinos have a lower energy than those detected in the Brookhaven experiment. They will interact with gallium, an element similar to aluminum, producing germanium atoms in the process. The gallium detector that the experiment requires is being planned cooperatively by Brookhaven Lab, Israel's Weizmann Institute of Science and West Germany's Max Planck Institute. The scientists hope eventually to place the gallium detector in the same gold mine in South Dakota that now contains the huge tank of cleaning fluid.

Another way to detect neutrinos has been proposed by scientists at the Bell telephone Laboratories in Murray Hill, N.J. Rather than recording only the total number of neutrinos being captured at or above a certain energy, the Bell Labs experiment would look at a broad range of solar neutrinos, on an energy spectrum ranging from 0 to 14 million electron volts.

"This spectral detail is a master key to unlock the secret of the nature of the solar furnace," said R.S. Raghavan of Bell Labs. "Some specific spectral features would reassure us of the basic premise of nuclear fusion; others would clarify the fine detail of the solar structure. It is analogous to observing the color spectrum of a flame — the proportions of red, yellow and blue, etc. — to determine how hot a furnace is and perhaps how it works."

Davis of Brookhaven Lab said the two new experiments may provide useful data within five years, but it may take a decade or more of concerted work before some answers to the solar neutrino puzzle start to emerge.

The spacecraft cameras

By JOHN NOBLE WILFORD
New York Times

PASADENA, Calif. — There was a time when the other planets and their moons were little more than points of light in the night sky. Now, they are being discovered as distinctive worlds, their images etched on the mind through that electronic extension of the human eye, the spacecraft-borne camera.

Jupiter and its largest moons are places now, not objects, in large measure because of the two slow-scan vidicon cameras — one wide-angle, one narrow-angle — on Voyager 1. And as the spacecraft navigated the heart of the Jovian system this month, its photographs were everything the scientists had hoped for when they began planning the Voyager mission to Jupiter and Saturn back in 1972. The mission, and thus the spacecraft, was essentially designed around the cameras.

Scientists and engineers working on the so-called imaging experiment had to produce a system that could survive longer (up to eight years) and operate from greater distances (well over a billion miles) than any previous spacecraft cameras.The system also had to be capable of taking high-resolution pictures of varied worlds — the giant gaseous planets and the rocky and icy surfaces of their moons.

Soon after he was chosen leader of the imaging science team, at the end of 1972, Dr. Bradford A. Smith, a University of Arizona astronomer, realized that cameras like those employed on the Mariner 9 missions to Mars "just weren't what you should be flying to Jupiter and Saturn."

The first improvement had to be in resolution, which meant the focal length of the narrow-angle camera had to be extended. Voyager would never come nearly as close to its targets as Mariner 9 had to Mars. A 1,500-millimeter telescope was substituted for Mariner's 500-millimeter one. Without the tripling of resolution, Dr. Smith said, it might have been impossible to distinguish the fault lines observed on the satellite Ganymede or the fine structure of the Jovian clouds. The alternative would have been to fly closer, and that was too risky in the case of Jupiter and not feasible for the moons because of the trajectory. At a distance of 13,000 miles from Io, the closest encounter of the mission, Voyager's narrow-angle camera could resolve objects as small as one-fifth of a mile in size.

Besides the telescopic lens, each camera consists of a filter wheel, a selenium-sulfur vidicon tube and assorted processing electronics. Altogether the two camera systems, mounted at the end of a spacecraft boom, weigh 84 pounds and draw only 42 watts.

The front of the vidicon tube, which is six inches long and one inch wide is a photo-sensitive surface that reacts to light when it is heated by a filament inside the tube. The vidicon converts light to electrons that are scanned and processed into digital form for transmission to earth.

For long Voyager missions, the tubes were redesigned to reduce operating temperatures that might cause them to wear out. More than 100 of these tubes were bought and tested, the winners in the test getting a trip in space.

It was back to the drawing board after the Pioneer 10 spacecraft flew by Jupiter in December 1973 and discovered intense radiation belts. Extra shielding was added to protect the camera's sensitive electronic components. Lens materials were tested in a high-energy particle accelerator. When the wide-angle lens turned brown from the radiation, new radiation-stabilized glass had to be found and Voyager's encounter with Jupiter produced no degradation in the camera lens.

The cameras were modified in other ways because of where they were going. Voyager, for example, would pass its target at extremely high velocities and take pictures in a dimmer light (being farther from the sun) than did the Mariner. The lighting conditions required longer exposure times and this, combined with the speed, raised the problem of possible image smearing. The cameras, therefore, had to be set to underexpose the vidicon and for the data from an under-exposed picture to be meaningful the camera's preamplifier had to be redesigned to handle much weaker signals.

Voyager's entire communications system was upgraded to be able to handle transmissions of more pictures at each encounter with a planetary body. A 12-foot dish antenna was mounted on top of the spacecraft, a very high frequency radio signal was employed, and a new amplifier was installed at the ground receiving stations.

Other changes were made in the camera to improve the scientific value of their pictures. The system was designed so that the shutters on both cameras could open simultaneously, enabling scientists to relate small-scale features to larger ones taken in wide-angle views. This is particularly valuable in analyzing the motions of Jupiter's clouds.

Study Follows Tax Protests

Widespread tax protests in a number of B.C. municipalities have led the finance ministry to commission a study on the effects of taxation on business.

The study was started after the ministry was besieged by letters and telephone calls about the effects on industry of taxes, a government spokesman said.

David Emerson, director of policy planning, said the study will also consider incentives to attract business to the province.

Price Waterhouse Associates of Vancouver, a consulting firm, was hired by the government about three weeks ago to do the study which is to focus on the effect of taxation on existing business and industry.

Several firms had complained to the government about tax hikes of up to 100 per cent last year and the B.C. Chamber of Commerce has also expressed concern.

Esperanto Offer for 'Kingdom' Spurned

CRANBROOK (UPC) — The Canadian Esperanto Association Tuesday offered to buy town clerk Ian Turner's "kingdom" for $100 in the name of Canadian Unity.

Turner acquired his pie-shaped kingdom on the B.C. — Alberta border when he discovered an error in a boundary commission ruling which made the area technically a "no-man's land."

Turner proclaimed it an independent kingdom and registered his own coat of arms.

But His Majesty was not amused by the CEA offer. He described the association offer as "impudent" and said he would issue a call to arms if Esperantist forces showed any sign of pressing the matter further.

"I am, however, prepared to offer a special Royal dispensation to the association allowing its members to establish an underground radio station in the kingdom," Turner said. "But all broadcasts must be in Gaelic."

Members of the Esperanto association advocate the use of Esperanto, a universal artificial language which they say will promote international understanding.

Turner has sent an official offer to the association, written in Gaelic with the help of Norman MacDonald, Assistant Professor of Celtic Studies at the Beaton Institute, Cape Breton College, Sydney, Nova Scotia, he said.

"I sent the wording to him for translation into Gaelic," Turner said. "He wrote back saying if there was any language in the world which deserves an independent principality, it is Gaelic."

MacDonald also urged him to apply for recognition of his heraldic claim and registration of his coat of arms with the Scottish heraldic court in Edinburgh. This is now under royal consideration, Turner said.

No reply has yet been received from the Esperanto Association.

No Evidence - No Case

VANCOUVER (CP) — Because the prosecution was not ready to proceed Tuesday, a bylaw court judge dismissed a charge that two Vancouver rooming house operators failed to keep a daily check on one of their tenants.

The body of James Baki was found several days after he died last November in a rooming house in the city's downtown eastside.

In court Tuesday, the prosecution asked for an adjournment because two police officers and a coroner's aide were unavailable to testify, but Judge C. J. Lewis ordered the case to proceed.

When there was no evidence presented, he dismissed charges.

Appeal Rejected

OTTAWA (CP) — An appeal by a former Vancouver RCMP officer against a one-year jail sentence was rejected Tuesday in the Supreme Court of Canada.

James Charles Hunt was convicted last September of theft over $200 in connection with a heroin conspiracy and given an absolute discharge.

Verdict Upheld

VANCOUVER (CP) — The British Columbia Court of Appeal has upheld second-murder convictions against three prisoners who killed a fellow prisoner of the medium-security Matsqui institution in 1976.

The three appeal court justices were unanimous Tuesday in rejecting an appeal by Grant Ronald Andrews, Thomas Robert Elton and Andreas Van Amerongen against their convictions.

A B.C. Supreme Court jury had found the trio guilty in the stabbing death of Gerald Wadlow in his cell in July, 1976.

Walkout Threat

PENTICTON (CP) — Labor trouble is developing among municipal workers because management has been cutting the pay rates of employees called back from layoffs, Bob MacRae, president of Local 608 of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, said Monday.

Murder Charged

BURNABY (CP) — Aarne Olavi Laidre, 35, of Burnaby, was charged Tuesday with second-degree murder in the stabbing death of Ronald William McKay, 37.

McKay was stabbed to death Monday night in an apartment building in this Vancouver-area municipality, RCMP said.

Perils of Paddling

PORTCHESTER, England (CP) — Mick Fletcher, 22, claims it is faster to paddle eight kilometres to work and back each day across busy Portsmouth Harbor than face traffic snarls. So far his only traffic problems have come from warships.

SFU Lockout Eased

BURNABY (CP) — Simon Fraser University said Tuesday it has lifted the lockout against its library and purchasing office employees to overcome one obstacle preventing a return to work by striking clerical and administrative workers.

University spokesman Dennis Roberts said the move will affect about 53 of the 650 employees, members of the Association of University and College Employees (AUCE), who have been on strike for nearly two weeks.

Classes are continuing to be held at the university but student services have been affected.

Some students held a rally Tuesday in support of the strikers but Roberts said some students were planning an "anti-strike" rally today.

Meanwhile, about 20 AUCE members travelled to Victoria Tuesday in an effort to break the stalemate in negotiations.

The delegation met with opposition party members but it was unable to get permission to go before the Social Credit caucus.

The delegation managed to catch Labor Minister Allan Williams in the corridor of the legislature but he walked away when members argued that the university is using government policy to justify what they called inadequate wage proposals.

Glory Days Of Forests 'At Hand'

KELOWNA (CP) — The glory days of forestry in the province are just beginning although the days of great abundance may be gone forever, British Columbia's chief forester said Tuesday.

Bill Young told delegates to a Canadian Forestry Association seminar that the province's new Forests Act calls for government and industry to invest more in the future of forest resources than ever before.

The forest service now is required to prepare a five-year program to increase productivity of forest and range resources, he said, as well as restocking and rehabiltating forest land.

The Forest Act, proclaimed last year, also provides a clear written statement of the objectives, purposes and functions of the provincial forests ministry, Young said.

Parade Marks Book Week

A children's costume parade from Beacon Hill Park to Market Square on Sunday, April 1 will start Victoria's participation in Canada's first National Book Festival.

While those taking part can wear any costume of their choice the emphasis will be om costumes depicting characters from Canadian books.

The parade will leave the park at 1:30 p.m., headed by the well-known Victoria group, Kaleidoscope Players.

On reaching Market Square, the Kaleidoscope Players will present a show called Books, Books, Books.

At the same time in the square all Victoria booksellers will have displays of Canadian books and magazines.

That evening 27 Vancouver Island authors will attend a Writers' Pub Night at the Open Space Gallery, 510 Fort Street.

Evelyn Samuel, editor and publisher of the Canadian Children's Magazine in Victoria, says the event will be "poetry and novel readings with alcohol".

There will be a no-host bar. Admission is free for all.

All during that week Canadian books and magazines will be featured in special displays by book shops and the Greater Victoria Public Library.

The public will also be able to meet more than 20 local authors in the book department of Eaton's on Saturday, April 7, from 12:30 to 3:30 p.m.

The Kaleidoscope Players will be in Vancouver on April 2 to again present Books, Books, Books as part of the entertainment in Robson Square which will mark the official opening of the National Book Festival there.

Provincial Minister Hugh Curtis will officially open Vancouver's week-long program and Gordon Shrum will act as host.

Elsewhere on Vancouver Island, Ucluelet will celebrate the festival with a kite-flying contest at 2 p.m. April 8 at Long Beach. The kites must picture the cover of a Canadian book or one of its characters, and must fly.

Five hundred children will be involved in the Great Nanaimo Scavenger Hunt. Book stores, newspapers, the museum, police and fire stations and the local radio station will all take part.

Mayor Frank Ney will hand out book prizes on the steps of City Hall.

The country-wide festival was initiated by the Canada Council and has as its theme Enjoy Reading All About Us.

Five regional committees — British Columbia-Yukon, Prairies-Northwest Territories, Ontario, Quebec and Atlantic — have organized the various projects.

UVic Fee Plan Goes to Senate

A proposal to lift the limit on fees for University of Victoria courses should be examined in more detail, UVic's board of governors has decided.

The proposal, by student representative Nick Haazen and staff representative Sonia Birch-Jones, recommends increasing the fee for each unit of course credit.

Undergraduate students now pay $26 a course unit to a maximum of 15 units or $540 a year.

The proposal recommends each undergraduate unit should cost $39, law courses, $47, and graduate courses should be increased to $41 a unit from the current $38.

As a result, revenues from student fees would increase 10.8 per cent and would make total student fees, including residents' fees, account for nearly 10 per cent of the university budget.

The proposal will be submitted to the senate for further discussion.

Oak Bay Recreation Centres

don't let nickels and dimes come between you and owning your home

Remember when you were small and you would get a nickel for doing some household chore? Or wondering how to spend you dime after skating or a show? That was a big deal, right? Well, now you're older, and there's a few more nickels and dimes to go around. But it's hard to break old habits. We know. That's why we built Wilson Court.

Because nickels and dimes are important here. They make the difference between renting and owning your own home. For so little difference (and maybe less) than you're paying now, you can buy your very own townhome. A townhome with about 1,400 sq. ft. of beautifully finished living space.

Three bedrooms, balcony and basement and your own laundry room. Small down payment and monthly payments as low as $214.00 O.A.C. In fact, the way we figure it, the difference is only pennies a day and that makes sense . . . er, nickels and dimes.

Headway On UVic Housing

After four years of trying to develop a site near the University of Victoria for married student accommodation, the development firm Angus & Pike Contractors Co. Ltd. at last appears to be making some headway.

Saanich council's planning committee recommended Tuesday night that municipal planners meet with the firm to work out acceptable design proposals for a 20-unit townhouse development on a 1.25-acre campus-edge property between McCoy and McKenzie.

The latest proposal has the support of municipal planner Gil Laurenson, who noted in a report that the developer envisages the 20 low-profile units in four or five buildings resembling single-family accommodation.

Ald. David Paterson noted that the developer had steadily scaled down his proposed density — earlier proposals included a 70-unit apartment and a 32-unit townhouse — and should now receive some co-operation.

Official Plan Bylaw Urged

When is a community plan not a community plan?

When it's not official, according to three Saanich aldermen — Howard Sturrock, John Mika and Irene Block — who argued strenuously Tuesday night that council should adopt an official plan by bylaw rather than a mere resolution.

Otherwise, they claimed, the document will be no plan at all but simply a broad statement of policies lacking any real commitment and subject to change at the whim of future councils.

But the trio was outnumbered by one in the planning committee vote which followed a lengthy debate.

Instead, the committee supported Mayor Mel Couvelier's motion urging council to adopt a community plan by resolution following a public hearing.

Under this approach, the plan once adopted by council would be referred to the Capital Region Board and any subsequent proposals to change it would first have to be aired at a public meeting, rather than a formal public hearing.

Block's unsuccessful motion to adopt an official community plan by bylaw envisaged filing the document with the provincial government's inspector of municipalities.

Couvelier argued that council had no right to adopt a rigid plan which would bind future councils with "handcuffed options" for years to come.

He pointed out that no council among the other core municipalities has adopted an official plan, and said the obvious reason is that they want to allow a degree of flexibility in planning to meet altered circumstances.

But Mika replied that Victoria, Oak Bay and Esquimalt are mature, developed municipalities whose residents are reasonably sure they will not be confronted suddenly with traumatic change, whereas Saanich is still a semi-rural municipality facing heavy development pressures.

Following the committee vote Mika commented: "I believe it is an absolute sellout of our ratepayers and citizens, an absolute sellout."

Block agreed, but Ald. David Paterson said the comment was ironic considering that "you (Mika) were responsible for the destruction of the official community plan" abandoned in the draft stage in 1977.

Storefront Office Gets Nod

A proposal to establish a temporary storefront planning office in the Cordova Bay area was approved in principle Tuesday night by Saanich council's planning committee.

The office will be staffed for a period of up to one month by a member of the municipal planning department so residents can express their views on the area's desirable population density, sewage disposal and related planning issues.

Details of the office location and operating cost will be presented at council's April 2 meeting.

On another matter concerning Cordova Bay, the committee recommended that council commission a consultant from the B.C. Research Council to conduct a preliminary investigation of the costs involved in a full-scale study of alternatives to piped sewage collection.

The official's trip will cost an estimated $325.

Mayor Mel Couvelier and Ald. Howard Sturrock opposed the proposal as premature, arguing that the expert could not advise council how to tackle the sewage disposal problem until he knows what density of population is planned for the area.

Said Sturrock: "This $325 is going to give us nothing except a proposal to spend $10,000."

It Looks Like an Election Session for MLAs

By PAUL NICHOLSON
Times Staff

The B.C. legislature gets back into business tomorrow with the reading at 2 p.m. of the Throne Speech to start the fourth session of the 31st parliament.

There is little doubt the speech — authored by Premier Bill Bennett and read by Lieut.-Gov. Henry Bell-Irving — will carry hints of "gifts" that will either be turned into pre-election legislation during the spring session or Socred campaign promises during a spring election.

Bennett's five-year mandate still has almost two years to run but it is a thinly-disguised party secret that the premier, his cabinet, backbenchers and party workers are straining at the leash for an early election.

Twice Bennett has whipped the party faithful into an election frenzy and if he has to back off a second time, he may find it difficult to re-ignite the fervor.

Many observers believe a two-day mini-convention in Kamloops April 6-7 will be the rallying point for a spring campaign.

However, Bennett's scenario is being disrupted by Prime Minister Trudeau.

Trudeau's indecision on a federal vote has Bennett wondering what he should do.

If Trudeau holds off until June, Bennett will likely go early, probably the minute his budget is attacked.

But if Trudeau calls a May vote, Bennett will hold off until the fall or next spring, and have a regular session with normal legislation following the budget.

Either way, the $4.5 billion budget that will take B.C. into the 1980s will be laden with election goodies.

Debate on the throne speech will continue to the end of next week and the budget will likely be introduced the following Monday, April 2.

With the help of some $300 million in surpluses the Socreds have accumulated over the past two years, Bennett is reported to be planning a gift package of eight goodies designed to win the hearts of the voters.

The public has had a peek at four of them — the five free resources corporation shares, the availablity of Crown land at less than market value, a promised increase in homeowner grants and the increase in welfare rates.

In his recent prediction of yet another record budgetary surplus for this year, Wolfe said the government will use the money for programs for people.

The speculation is the budget will contain an intensive job creation program using at least part of that surplus.

It is also a pretty safe bet that the government will pledge continued restraint in the public sector with a re-emphasis of the Socred policy that civil service wages should follow those in the private sector, not lead them.

Tackling big labor could also be an election plank for the Socreds.

If Bennett decides against a quick spring election, a normal legislative session will follow the 10-days of budget debate.k

Some new bills or amendments will have to be introduced to implement the freeing of the Crown land and the giving away of the shares in the B.C Resources Investment Corp.

The white paper of Family and Child Services has been circulating for some time, and Human Resources Minister Grace McCarthy is almost certain to introduce legislation in its final form this spring.

The Eckardt Royal Commission on electoral reform will be ready for the spring session. That extensive five or six volume re-port could lead to sweeping changes in the B.C. electoral system.

Added to the boundary changes approved last year, are possible changes in voting procedure, status of small parties in the house, MLAs' salaries and expences and tax deductible campaign expenses and contributions.

Municipal Affairs Minister Bill Vander Zalm has promised legislation to speed rezoning and development approval from municipalities.

And he is expected to present legislation designed to make major changes in the structures of regional districts and the way they operate.

Health Minister Bob McClelland has said he will introduce a bill to end elections for the Vancouver General Hospital Board so he can appoint an administrative board himself.

Attorney-General Garde Gardom is expected to present a bill setting up a new crown corporation, the Legal Services Corporation, to combine the operations of both legal aid and Legal Services Commission.

Labor Minister Allan Williams is expected to introduce labor standards legislation governing hours of work, overtime, legal holidays and working conditions for the 55 per cent of the B.C. work force which is not unionized.

New legislation in the forest ministry is also anticipated, and the legislature is to approve the appointment of Dr. Karl Friedmann as the province's first ombudsman.

Last year's session began March 30, and was one of the shortest in recent years with 64 sitting days.

Imperial Oil Warns Gov't It's Gambling

OTTAWA (UPC) — Imperial Oil Ltd. president Jack Armstrong warned the Canadian government Tuesday that it is gambling with its oil supplies by pressing Imperial to withdraw from pool arrangements with Exxon and buy directly from Venezuela.

Armstrong told a House of Commons natural resources committee that Canadians are more assured of a secure oil supply through multinational pool arrangements than through direct purchases from producing nations.

"Under the system of oil pools, there is less likelihood that you'll get burned — you may get singed — but you won't get burned," Armstrong said.

"If anything, the future of international petroleum supplies is more clouded now than it has been for a number of years. We believe this is no time to gamble with the supply security of eastern Canada."

Armstrong said world oil supply cutbacks resulting from the political upheaval in Iran demonstrated how delicate the balance of supplies was. "If all Canadian imports originated from Iran right now, Canada would not have a single barrel of oil to call on," he said.

"Through the use of oil pools, we can call on other sources of oil if there are disruptions."

Energy Minister Alastair Gillespie told Imperial last month to bypass its U.S.-based parent Exxon after the firm arbitrarily reduced Canadian supplies of Venezuelan oil because of Iranian shortages.

Imperial rejected the request and Gillespie said last week that Petro-Canada would enter direct negotiations with Venezuela to purchase 100,000 barrels of oil a day to secure a supply of crude for eastern Canada.

Armstrong dismissed as "incorrect" Gillespie's contention Exxon was unwilling to allow its subsidiary to buy direct. He said Exxon told Imperial it could not continue to enjoy the advantages of pool arrangements if it chose to buy oil directly from Venezuela.

Meanwhile, Liberals and Progressive Conservatives made it clear Tuesday they hope to get political mileage out of a bill to ration petroleum and coal in an energy crisis.

Gillespie told the Commons the Conservatives want to trust future energy supplies to multinational corporations, while a Conservative accused the government of wanting dictatorial powers.

Gillespie challenged the Conservatives to vote against the bill so the Liberals could use this as an issue in the coming election campaign.

The government withdrew a threat to limit debate on the bill in return for opposition assurances the bill would receive final Commons approval today.

The legislation, introduced in mid-February, then goes to the Senate where speedy passage is expected. Prime Minister Trudeau wants the law in place before he calls the election.

Gillespie said it was pathetic to see Opposition Leader Joe Clark scrambling to put together an energy policy.

As third-reading debate continued Tuesday night, opposition MPs accused the government of filibustering its own bill.

Gillespie professed to be anxious to get the bill passed, but gave a one-hour speech Tuesday night, said New Democrat Les Benjamin. The government could have saved two days of debate if it had not introduced and then withdrawn a motion to cut off debate.

Heat Building Up In Freezer Plant Row

DUNCAN — The Cowichan Valley Regional District board showed too much haste in dealing with a controversial rezoning application to allow a $2.5 million freezer storage plant near Ladysmith, a director complains.

Buddy Russell, regional director for North Oyster where the freezer plant is to be located, also complained that the board was not listening to directors.

The freezer plant, proposed by Peter Limberis, has met considerable opposition, including a 100-signature petition and objections from 44 persons at a recent public hearing.

That prompted the regional board to turn down third reading of a bylaw approving the plant, but the CVRD later rescinded the motion and at its last meeting voted to give two readings to a zoning amendment bylaw paving the way for the development.

Information Debate Here

What has been described as one of the most important issues facing Canadians today will be the topic of a national conference beginning Thursday in Victoria.

The two-day conference on Freedom of Information legislation is expected to spark heated debate among lawyers and law-makers from across Canada.

Professor Murray Rankin of the University of Victoria's law faculty, co-sponsor of the event, said today the importance of resolving the issue can't be underestimated.

What's at stake is the individual's right of access to government information.

At present, he said, Canadians have no such rights. The release of information is left entirely to the whims of bureaucrats and political leaders.

The conference begins Thursday night with an speech by Privacy Commissioner Inger Hansen following an opening dinner at Laurel Point Inn.

Researchers Fold Saanich Inlet Bags

By AB KENT
Times Staff

A Canadian-U.S. marine research program in Saanich Inlet is winding down after eight years of successful experiments into ocean pollution.

The Controlled Ecosystem Pollution Experiment (CEPEX), which cost about $12 million, was financed largely by the U.S. National Science Foundation.

Scientific institutions which participated included the University of B.C. Institute of Oceanography, the Scripps Institute of Oceanography, the University of Miami, the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution and the Marine Laboratory of Aberdeen, the Skidaway Oceanographic Institute and the Institute of Ocean Sciences at Patricia Bay.

Dr. Tim Parsons, of the UBC Institute of Oceanography, said CEPEX has probably given some of the best answers to long-range worries about what happens when mercury, copper, cadmium and lead pollutants enter the food chain.

In addition to the heavy metals, marine biologists and chemists added some hydrocarbons to the controlled environment to observe the effect on minute marine organisms.

"The results have been reassuring to the extent that some of the scare has been taken out of the writings of people like (Jaques) Cousteau," he said.

The writers nevertheless had brought attention to the risks and had been successful in convincing politicians to provide research funds.

CEPEX has helped to show the resilience of the sea, says Parsons.

Where contaminants cause damage, it was found natural changes may take place to compensate.

"This is the story of evolution," he said.

Large plastic bags containing seawater columns were anchored to the bottom of the inlet and moored by large floating retaining rings at surface. Changes in the column were observed with introduction of various pollutants.

The wrapup of the experiment involves a computer analysis of data by scientists at Woods Hole, Mass.

CEPEX was part of the International Decade of Ocean Exploration and was originally intended to run for 10 years.

Leghold Trap Action Likely

Environment Minister Rafe Mair says he hopes some action can be taken on the leghold trap during the legislative session which begins Thursday.

Mair, just back from a trip to the Scandinavian countries, said he saw an interesting trap in Sweden which provincial officials believe might be a solution to the controversy over leghold traps. Critics of the leghold trap say it is cruel.

The minister said there is also another trap being developed by a B.C. inventor that could resolve the problem.

While Mair thinks the Swedish trap might resolve the leghold trap problem in Canada, he said B.C. would not be able to directly transfer the Scandinavian system of land and wildlife management because of different attitudes and landhold patterns.

He said 75 per cent of the land in Sweden is privately owned, a reversal of the Canadian situation, and land owners control hunting rights on the land. Sweden has "a good average population of animals" throughout the country and there are almost no wolves to contend with, Mair said.

Much of the land in Sweden is held by forest companies who give their employees hunting privileges as an incentive. The system has resulted in good management by the companies, Mair said.

It is tradition in Sweden and law in Norway that anyone can go on private property as long as proper care is taken of the land and no damage is done.

Editor Murdered

ROME (Reuter) — The editor of an Italian political weekly was shot dead in his car Tuesday, police said. Mino Pecorelli, 51, editor of Osservatore Politico, was found slumped on the steering wheel of his car in the Prati district of Rome with five bullet wounds in his body. The motive for the killing was not known, police said.

Go-Ahead for Moresby Logging

By PAUL NICHOLSON
Times Staff

The provincial cabinet's Environment and Land Use Committee (ELUC) has given the green light to logging the proposed South Moresby Wilderness area and other parts of the Southern Queen Charlotte Islands.

The committee said, however, it recognizes the potential for such a wilderness area and has placed certain restrictions on Rayonier Canada's renewed tree farm licence.

The licence carries with it commitments for detailed resource analyses and planning.

Forests Minister Tom Waterland said over the next few years a detailed land use planning program will be carried out for the entire South Moresby Wilderness Proposal area, leading to the possible establishment of recreation and conservation areas.

In addition, detailed terrain stability studies will be carried out leading to careful environmental management of sensative areas to guide logging operations.

The minister also said a detailed study of resource values in the Windy Bay watershed on Lyell Island will be made to resolve conflicting proposals in these areas. A final decision on specific area designations will be made by ELUC.

Waterland said the moves will be carried forward and co-ordinated by his ministry.

B.C.'s new forest legislation is designed to tackle complex resource planning and management situations such as those faced on the Queen Charlotte Islands, the minister said.

During the past year the South Moresby Wilderness Proposal has been the province's major environmental issue.

The Islands Protection Society, an environmental group based in the Charlottes, led the opposition to full-scale logging in the Moresby region and even went so far as initiating court action in an attempt to force public hearings.

In a B.C. Supreme Court ruling last month it was judged that Waterland did not have to hold public hearings before renewing Rayonier's licence.

Waterland said the decision that has now been reached by ELUC gives careful consideration to the diverse viewpoints regarding the future of the South Moresby area.

"Many persons and groups wrote in support of the (wilderness) proposal," the minister said.

"Many others including the International Woodworkers of America (IWA) and local residents expressed concern."

TRAFFIC LIGHTS COME TO PEKING

PEKING (UPI) — Traffic lights are flashing in Peking this week for the first time to control the city's notorious chaos of trucks, cars, and hordes of bicycles.

The flashing technological devices were introduced Monday at nine intersections in the Chinese capital. They are all on a 7-kilometre stretch of a north-south city street.

The move comes as part of a plan to improve Peking's traffic flow and "discipline."

The number of motor vehicles in the capital has increased rapidly in recent years and bicycles in the city now total 3 million. The official agency said "bottlenecks are common in rush hours."

Peking has been described by American visitors as the "Los Angeles of China" because of its sprawling tentacles of seemingly never-ending streets.

Jobless to Rise

months of the year has led the Conference Board in Canada to revise its annual national unemployment forecast down to 8.2 per cent.

The board, a private non-profit research organization, predicted three months ago that the the year-end average jobless rate would be 8.8 per cent.

In its quarterly forecast, released today, the board says it is unlikely the country will be able to maintain its January and February job expansion rate. But the strong two-month performance will be enough to bring down the annual unemployment rate by more than half a percentage point.

This is the most encouraging note in the board's six-page forecast.

The agency says the economy will grow by 3.4 per cent and the cost of living will rise by 8.3 per cent this year. These are the same predictions the board made in its December forecast.

Chief economist Thomas Maxwell says last year's large drop in the value of the dollar has led to uneven growth in various sectors of the economy. While exporting industries have been stimulated by the weak dollar, depreciation has driven up the cost of food, and other imported goods.

Also in Ottawa, Statistics Canada Tuesday reported Canadians made fewer trips abroad in January than in the same month a year earlier while the number of visitors to this country rose.

Preliminary figures show Canadians made 2.34 million visits abroad in January, down about three per cent.

terland is being misled by his senior policy advisers over the impact steep slope logging has in the Queen Charlotte Islands.

Bob Nixon said excerpts from a forest service research report published by the Times Tuesday show that Waterland is getting misleading information from his advisors.

The report states that the removal of timber from steep slopes in the Rennell Sound area will create massive erosion and slides.

Senior forest service representatives have been saying in recent weeks that the danger of slides in the area is minimal.

Nixon said the report on slide dangers in Rennell Sound is "but the latest disclosure in a long history of ministerial secrecy."

He added that "the irrational opposition of the forest service to implementing the provisions of the new Forests Act which call for multiple-use clearly suggests that the statute will be meaningless unless the minister takes action."

In a letter released by the company Tuesday, Q.C. Timber general manager Jack Sexton complained about being caught up in the controversy.

Sexton said that the wrangle has already cost the local work force $100,000 in lost wages.

Declaring 1979 International Year of the Child is fine. But what does it mean to you, the parent?

Aiming at drawing world attention to the needs of children, the United Nations during this year is urging all countries to respect the rights of the young. Yet rights are not very tangible things. Then neither are love nor time.

And so, is it intended that we shape up for a year; that just for 1979 we show our children more affection and quit knocking them about both physically and verbally? Or should this International Year of the Child be merely a transition, a period of awareness and the start of a better relationship between parents and their offspring?

Remembering a father who was distantly interested but usually too busy, the key to me has always seemed involvement. Don't send your kids off to do something. Do it with them. Or at least go along and watch. Sure, it takes up your time and doesn't always easy, of course, when there are several children or perhaps broken homes, but each of us can only do his or her best.

Just the other day I met a Victoria boy, 15 but looking younger, who comes from a single-parent family where things haven't been easy. But he was chosen because of his manners and his endeavors for a special trip to Ottawa.

Jason Merriman was one of only two from B.C. (the other was Gail George of Nanaimo) included among the 21 young people from across the country, members of the Boys and Girls Clubs of Canada, who carried a proclamation on the International Year of the Child to Ottawa.

There, they bunked in the Centretown Boys and Girls Club, presented the proclamation (supporting and commending the U.N. for declaring 1979 International Year of the Child) to John Diefenbaker at a pageant, met Prime Minister Trudeau, visited the Science Museum and went to a disco dance.

And what was his biggest thrill? "Meeting Mr. Diefenbaker," Jason said. What, more than the disco dance? And how about Mr. Trudeau?

"Oh, I don't know, he was in quite a rush really," Jason explained. "He was only there a moment or two. We gave him a copy of the proclamation as well and then he had to leave."

A Grade 9 student at Central junior high school, Jason pops across the road after school every weekday to the Boys and Girls Club where he enjoys playing floor hockey and pool and likes to do pottery and woodwork.

"We like to think we provide something recreation centres don't," Stan Warlow, the club's new executive director who moved here from a club in Niagara Falls, Ont., two months ago, said. "Our staff tries to get to know all the children and to help them develop their social skills."

For the Ottawa trip, young people who were good members and were helpful around the club were chosen, program director Mirella Spinelli explained.

When I asked Jason why he thought he was picked, he said: "Because of my reputation around here . . . that's all Mirella told me."

Jason Merriman shares with me the belief that parents' interest in, encouragement of and involvement with their children are the most important ingredients for producing more responsible young people and making Canada an even better country. There are parents I know who give their children everything, but precious little of their time.

With the 20 other young people from the Boys and Girls Clubs of Canada, Jason believes he took this message not only to those in high places in Ottawa but to the moms and dads back home.

The boy who has one younger sister and who dreams one day of becoming an auto mechanic explained his trip:

"It was an experience to get the message across to our parents to love and give affection to their children so they can grow up in a proper manner instead of hanging around street corners."

All-Out War To Decide Island Fate On Milfoil

By PAUL NICHOLSON
Times Staff

Vancouver Island lakes have escaped the Eurasian milfoil invasion.

And if the environment ministry's counter-attack on the lake-choking weed this summer is a success, the island will remain weed-free.

According to the province's director of aquatic plant management, Dr. Peter Newroth, it's not going to be an easy war, although he feels it can be won.

But judging from the weed's early victories and the ministry's Dunkirk-like retreat at Lake Okanagan, Newroth may exhibiting a bit of Churchillian pre-battle optimism.

The Eurasian milfoil's success in its blitzkrieg throughout parts of the province are staggering. Here's how it stacks up:

—Lake Okanagan: Defensive action only. Some weed cutting in prime recreation spots. Last year some 800 to 900 acres of the lake infested and spreading rapidly. Too late for chemical control.

—Milfoil identified in 40 water systems in the lower mainland and Fraser Valley covering about 1,000 acres. In 1977, weed found in five areas encompassing 50 to 100 acres.

—Weed is firmly established in Vancouver's show place, Queen Elizabeth Park, and in the new Van Dusen Botanical Gardens.

Shore-to-Shore in Three Years

—The first identification in the lower mainland was in Delta's Centennial Park three years ago. Today the lake is shore-to-shore Eurasian milfoil.

Milfoil thrives in water in warmer climates, making its control more difficult in the lower mainland and giving rise to fears that it would spread quickly if established on Vancouver Island.

—The weed is easily transferred from lake to lake. Boats and boat trailers are the main cause, but it is suspected even waterfowl can carry it to new areas.

Last year, 8,500 boats were checked at roadside stops. Almost one-quarter of them were found to be carrying milfoil fragments.

Newroth has put forward a $1 million proposal to the ministry designed to stop the spread to the Kootenays, the Cariboo and the Island.

The plan has two elements — increased roadside checks manned seven days a week and more detailed surveys in the prime recreation areas still untouched so any new infestation can be hit quickly and hard.

In fact, the ministry has standing permits from the Pollution Control Branch to spray 2,4-D on 20 lakes throughout the province on a moment's notice.

Last year a court battle prevented most of the spraying the ministry wanted to do. And by the time the ministry won the court action, it was too late in the year to carry out the spraying.

Photosynthesis Cut-Off Possible

But that won't be a problem this year.

New technology is also in the offing. One designer has developed a cutting machine that may kill milfoil plants as well as keep the weed well below the water surface.

The theory behind the machine is that the weed is cut regularly below the surface so its fronds never get near the surface for photosynthesis and the plant eventually dies.

Five roadside checks will be set up — two at the mainland ferry terminals, one at Hope and one at both the north and south ends of the Okanagan Valley.

There is no existing legislation forcing people towing boats to bring them in for an examination, but they will be encouraged to do so.

The check should only take a few minutes, and if weed fragments are found on the trailer or boat, they will be hosed off by workers at the check stops.

"It will be nice to get a jump on the plant for a change," Newroth says.

He says he'd been urging quick action for several years, but the unknowns about the effects of 2,4-D dictated caution.

But all that time the weed grew and now there is a huge problem.

First Ferry Rush This Weekend

B.C. Ferries Corp. has put on extra sailings and advised Victorians to get an early start this weekend to avoid the first major traffic crunch of the season.

"Spring break starts Friday and we know it will be crowded," traffic manager Bill Bouchard said today.

"The worst times will be Friday afternoon and evening and again on Saturday morning.

"We have carried out a publicity campaign encouraging people to leave early but we know many people can't get away until their children are out of school. It will be a busy afternoon."

He said anyone who can possibly leave Friday should do so and avoid the crowds. If they are not leaving until Saturday they would be advised to wait until after lunch.

The irony is that Saturday afternoons are often very quiet even on the busiest weekends.

Every available ferry will be pressed into service but there are limits because of loading facilities and available crews at this time of year.

A new schedule will be in effect, starting Thursday, with morning sailing times from Swartz Bay of 7, 8, 9, 11 and noon followed by 1, 3, 4, 5, 7, 8 and 9. There is bus service on all but the 8 a.m. sailing. In addition there are trips of the truck ferry, Queen of Alberni, at 11:45 a.m. and 3:15 p.m.

Buffet service will start Friday aboard all ferries on the Swartz Bay-Tsawwassen route from 5 p.m. onwards at $6.50. The service will be continued daily until April 2, the end of the spring break holiday, when it will revert to an availablility on Fridays, Sundays and holidays only until June 14.

"We have found we can make money with the buffet at peak travelling times only and that's when the service will be offered."

Full buffet service, including breakfast, lunch and dinner will start June 14 and and will continue all summer.

The corporation is also revising its menus for its regular cafeteria service.

Esquimalt Murder Charged

A 12-year-old seaman has been charged with second degree murder in connection with the death Monday of a 46-year-old man in an apartment in Esquimalt.

George Ronald Wyatt of 104-1007 Esquimalt Road, a seaman on board the Canadian Coast Guard weathership Vancouver, is to appear in provincial court.

Esquimalt police Insp. Peter Merriott said Wyatt was arrested Tuesday following an investigation into the cause of death of Charles Emmanual John Devine.

Devine's body was found by police answering an ambulance call to Wyatt's apartment at 7:30 a.m. Monday.

Merriott said the man died some time during the night.

Officers at first believed the man might have died from accidental causes.

Barbless Hook About-Face Charge Hurled

A spokesman for sports salmon fishermen today said they are roaring, howling mad over new regulations proposed by the federal fisheries department.

Among the suggested changes is the elimination of barbed and treble hooks and an increase in the minimum length of fish an angler would be permitted to keep.

Al Playfair, chairman of the B.C. Sports Fishery Advisory Board which met at the weekend in Nanaimo, said members believe the fisheries department did an about-face on the barbless hooks.

Representatives of the 350,000-strong sports fishing industry believed they had reached an understanding with federal representatives on the subject, Playfair said.

"If they haven't the guts to stand up to their decision, they should pack it up," he said.

It took three years to reach an agreement with fishermen on size and catch limits and on the principle of sports fishing licences to control the fishery and provide some funding for salmonid enhancement.

"If there is any attempt to choke us with the barbless hook, it will take only three minutes to rupture it," Playfair warned.

He said it would be easy to circumvent such an order and predicted sports fishermen would defy it.

Playfair said sports fishermen only agreed to offer to test the barbless hook for salmon fishing.

"Some of us, of our own volition, would do some barbless hook fishing," he said.

Federal officials say barbless hooks allow undersized fish to be caught, then released without injury.

Barbed and treble hooks make damage more likely because they are difficult to remove, with the result that many fish die shortly after they are released.

The department also proposes raising the size limit from 12 to 18 inches for all species, but Playfair said the upper limit for chinook salmon could be set as high as 20 inches. Fishermen say they would prefer a 16-inch minimum.

A Campbell River Chamber of Commerce spokesman said a barbless hook ban would seriously damage a $40-million fishing and tourist industry.

"Any fisherman who loses a 50-pound tyee (salmon) because he is forced to fish with a barbless hook won't come back next year," he said.

Pacific region fisheries management advisory council is to make a recommendation April 11 for consideration by the department at Ottawa.

Second Logging Death

A 55-year-old veteran faller was killed Tuesday, the second logging fatality in the Sooke area this month.

Sooke RCMP said John Alexander Gordon of 626 Simcoe was killed instantly when a dead snag, 30 feet long and two feet thick, crashed down on top of him while falling at a Pacific Logging site 30 miles northwest of Sooke. The accident happened at about 11 a.m.

Last Friday 23-year-old Robert John Plester was killed when a huge limb broke off the top of a tree he was falling and pierced his chest.

Grouse Nest Moving Day

It was moving day out at the Grouse Nest estate today.

Two deputy sheriff's officers arrived this morning with a moving van to assist owner Hasaam Kamil in vacating the 560-acre waterfront property in East Sooke.

The action follows a Supreme Court writ of possession issued last summer to Laurel Properties Ltd. of Vancouver with whom Kamil had defaulted on a $1.35 million mortgage secured three years ago.

Kamil declined to comment on the foreclosure this morning.

"It's the system, I guess," he explained dolefully. "I can't do anything about that."

He would not say where he will be moving to or what he plans to do with his other holdings which include 2,000 acres in the Highlands.

A sheriff's department spokesman said Kamil's goods and belongings will be taken off the property and placed in vans alongside Gillespie Road. From there Kamil will presumably make storage arrangements.

Kamil bought the property in the early 1960s and after a short, unsuccessful venture running the place as a resort, had made it his private residence, until today.

Three-Mill Hike Looms

Greater Victoria property owners will face a three-mill increase in school taxes this year, according to the calculations of district administrators.

A mill rate increase from 43.4 in 1978 to 46.5 in 1979 has been computed, the board's legal and financial advisor Ernie Shaw told a special meeting between trustees and Victoria and Oak Bay city council members Tuesday.

The 7 per cent increase in the mill rate is mainly due to a reduction in the province's share of education costs.

During the past four years the basic mill levy applied to education costs has increased from 31.75 to 41.68 mills, adding almost two mills.

Incentive grants giveh b, the provincial government this year to the district will reduce the tax bill by about $400,000, or .6 mills.

Trustee Behavior Flabbergasts Pickup

By LORRAINE LOCHERTY
Times Staff

Greater Victoria school board chairman Carol Pickup today said she was flabbergasted by the actions of some trustees Tuesday night during a special budget discussion with Victoria and Oak Bay.

"I was disappointed by the lack of loyalty and support demonstrated," Pickup said; adding she thought the board had agreed to smooth philosophical differences for the evening.

Pickup said she was particularly upset with trustee Peter Yorke, who opposed her on most issues, including the seating arrangements.

But Pickup said she is generally satisfied with the meeting, set up as an informal talk about budget items and the education ministry's funding formula.

Pickup said today she hoped the board and municipalities could make a combined approach to government to protest its shift of the burden of education spending to local taxypayers, but realized the idea was "beautiful but unlikely."

Arranged at the request of Victoria and Oak Bay councils, it started with a detailed explanation of the school board's 1979 budget and the education ministry's finance formula.

Aldermen and trustees were divided into three discussion groups, a seating strategy designed by Pickup to avoid confrontation.

But assigning seperate tables didn't prevent flareups.

Oak Bay mayor Brian Smith said he came to the meeting expecting a free and open exchange. "After all, we both have to reach into the same taxpayers' pockets."

Then Yorke said he didn't like the seating plan either and was disappointed in the agenda.

"It was my impression aldermen would be asking political questions," he said.

Smith said the board was using the ministry's decreasing share of education spendng as a "scapegoat" and that the real problem is spiralling school costs.

Pickup told the group that the board feels educational quality is just as important as fiscal restraint; the needs of students come first.

Eleven teaching positions added this year will be split between a much-needed careers program and remedial and diagnostic services at the junior high school level and decreasing large class size in elementary schools.

Pickup pointed out that the loss of 1,000 students this year means the district also loses about $1 million in government revenue.

Trustee Martin Levin explained 80 per cent of the operating budget is arbitrated teacher salaries and beyond board control.

He said the board is not prepared to follow Saanich School District's hold-the-line approach and cut additional teaching positions to keep budgeted teacher salary increases at 6 per cent.

But Trustee Glyn Williams said not all trustees on the board agree with the majority's point of view.

Greater Victoria Teachers Association president Trevor Calkins told the meeting Saanich's pupil-teacher ratio is already lower than Greater Victoria's, and that the district would have to increase staff by about 75 teachers to catch up to it.

Victoria Ald. Bill McElroy said he noticed the board had philosophical differences but commented "a mill on my house is $7 and you're welcome to it."

At the end of the meeting Victoria and Oak Bay invited the board to drop in on their upcoming budget discussions.

Boffins Bundle Up To Float over Pole

OTTAWA (CP) - Some top Canadian scientists are bundling up for what promises to be the largest known expedition to the North Pole.

Ken Witham, director general of the energy department's earth physics branch, said at a news conference Tuesday the main aim of the $1.2-million project is to study the Lomonosov Ridge, a mountain range beneath the Arctic Ocean.

Scientists believe the 3,000-metre high range will help them uncover past mysteries and perhaps some of the future as well.

One theory, for example, suggests the ridge was once part of the European continent. But results from about 14 experiments during the two-month venture may tell for sure.

The experiments are also expected to "produce in the long term a knowledge base to guide Arctic development intelligently," says Witham.

A full team of about 50, including several United States scientists, will start going to the North Pole in early April.

But a small airborne group has been scouting for several days searching for a large flat ice floe where three camps will be set up to receive about 365,000 kilograms of equipment to be flown in later by a Hercules transport aircraft, Witham said.

Scientists here are especially excited about the project, which has been named Lorex, because it will offer Canadians an opportunity to demonstrate their expertise.

Soviet scientists have been conducting experiments at the North Pole for the last 25 years.

"Canadian scientists have been participating in international projects," Witham said. "But we need to demonstrate a major expedition in the Arctic with Canadian planning, management and Canadian field operations.

Beginning in Feburary, the first of about 700 scientists and their support began moving into the barren lands for research on what is known as the polar continental shelf.

George Hobson, program director, says about 140 projects will be conducted on the shelf, the Arctic islands off the continental mainland. They include a count of caribou and polar bear herds so realistic hunting quotas can be set, studies in animal life, their feeding habits, mineral resources, ocean tides and climate studies.

But Hobson says, there is a tremendous amount of Canadian expertise.

"We know of 782 university professors in Canada who have experitise in the North above the 60th parallel. These are people who have worked in the North or who have spent their summers in the North."

Research in the North Pole, however, is another matter.

Depending on the wind, current and weather, scientists aboard the ice floe expect to drift about five kilometres a day taking it over the Lomonosov Ridge.

Jim Tanner, director of the department's gravity and geodynamics division, said two computer systems will be set up on the camp site just to collate and reduce navigational data so scientists will know where they are.

He said most of the experiments are geared to learning more about the material which makes up the ridge.

Seismic experiments, for example, will help show rock formation. Blasting charges are used to bounce sound of rock surfaces to indicate depth and size.

Other experiments will measure the age of the sea water, the electrical conductivity of the ridge, heat flow at various points in the ridge, water currents and salinity (the amount of salt in the water).

Samples will also be taken in hopes of finding fossils in the ridge's sediment.

Arctic Pipeline Impact Report 'A Lot of Fluff'

WHITEHORSE, Yukon (CP) — The federal Northern Pipeline Agency came under heavy fire Tuesday from private interest groups during public hearings on possible social, economic and environmental impacts of the proposed Alaska Highway natural gas pipeline.

The Canadian Arctic Resources Committee, an Ottawa-based environmental group, criticized the agency, the hearings and Foothills Pipe Lines (Yukon) Ltd., the company building the line.

Don Gamble, committee policy director, said the Foothills environmental impact statement released in January offered a list of rambling ideas rather than a concise series of analyses and commitments.

"The statement displays an inordinate amount of fluff," Gamble said.

Foothills was required by the agency to release the statement to meet environmental standards. The statement outlined major environmental concerns such as fuel spills, the sensitivity of permafrost and disruption of fish and wildlife.

Current plans call for starting the pipeline, which would parallel the Alaska Highway, in 1982.

Gamble also said public interest groups view the agency — headed by one-time external affairs minister Mitchell Sharp — as "the greatest obstacle to the successful resolution of these environmental and social problems."

He said a meeting last November was a good illustration of his criticism.

"The response we had to that meeting must be one of the most unhealthy examples of titanic administrative myopia and social and environmental lip-service that we have ever encountered," Gamble said.

Meanwhile, Deputy Prime Minister Allan MacEachen acknowledging that private sponsors of the northern natural gas pipeline cannot be compelled to complete the project, said Tuesday night that neither Canada nor the United States is contemplating financial guarantees for the $12 billion international agreement.

However, he repeated that Canada would not approve pre-building southern portions of the pipeline to carry surplus Alberta gas to the lower 48 states without insisting that financing for the entire project be in place.

MacEachen, responsible to cabinet for the project that would pipe Alaskan natural gas through Canada to southern U.S. markets, made the comments as MPs pressed for details of the project now nearly two years behind schedule.

"Neither the Canadian nor the U.S. government has ever regarded pre-building as a development which would in any way impede the building of the entire pipeline from Alaska, but as one that would encourage its realization," he said.

Progressive Conservative Erik Nielsen (Yukon) and Liberal Ian Watson (La Praire) said they are worried that approval of pre-building could lead to a situation where sponsors would not complete the project.

Early access to cheaper Alberta gas could discourage efforts to complete the pipeline to obtain more expensive Alaskan gas, they said.

Ottawa to Pay 'Realistic' Rent

OTTAWA (TNS) — Seventeen years after the Glassco Royal Commission recommended it, the government is finally moving to charge federal departments a realistic market rent for their accommodation.

Treasury Board President Judd Buchanan told the Senate committee on national finance that the government was picking up on the committee's recommendation and was launching a two-year pilot project to test the concept in the Pacific Region.

A senior federal official said later that full implementation across Canada would take three years. DPW is spending $547 million on accomodation for departments and agencies in 197980.

The idea is to make the department of public works dependent on the revenue derived from accomodation and service charges levied against departments, thus saving the taxpayer money because departments will have to justify the amount of accomodation needed and its lavishness.

At the same time, the recently appointed federal comptrollergeneral Harry Rogers has his way, DPW will have to answer for the way it operates to prevent it from getting into unrealistic deals in renting accomodation from private developers or in constructing and operating Crown buildings.

Eased Rules Urged For Foreign Banks

OTTAWA (CP) — The Commons finance committee says proposed limits on the activities of foreign banks in Canada are too restrictive and should be loosened to allow more competition with domestic banks.

The committee says in a report released Tuesday that a proposal in new banking legislation to limit foreign banks to five branches is "too arbitrary" and should be abandoned.

It says that although the total lending of all foreign banks in Canada should be restricted, the ceiling should be raised to about $11 billion from the proposed $8 billion.

It concludes after a detailed study of the Bank Act that the five-branch limit would result in "a concentration of foreign bank activities in wholesale banking operations in the major financial centres to the neglect of regional needs."

Liberal and Progressive Conservative members of the committee supported the report but the committee's lone NDP member, Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge), issued a minority report opposing the entry of any foreign banks into the country.

The removal of limits on the number of branches was also supported in a recent report by the Senate banking committee.

The foreign bank proposals have been touted by the government as important for stimulating competition in the banking industry in Canada to the benefit of borrowers.

Foreign banks have complained the limits are too restrictive while some domestic chartered banks have strongly opposed any relaxation. The domestic banks reached no consensus on the issue.

Foreign banks are not permitted to operate with federal charters under the current Bank Act although about 35 foreign banks now operate lending operations under provincial charters and have combined assets of about $5 billion.

The Bank Act revisions are part of the regular review of banking legislation every 10 years. The existing act was to expire in June, 1977, but has been extended twice as study of new legislation dragged out.

A third bill to extend the Bank Act another year to April 1980, was introduced in the Commons Monday.

PWA Files for Merger with Transair

CALGARY (CP) — Pacific Western Airlines announced today it has filed a formal application with the air transport committee of the Canadian transport commission seeking approval of merger with its Winnipeg-based subsidiary Transair Ltd.

Paeific Western employs about 2,400 persons and operates a network of scheduled routes in British Columbia, Alberta and the Northwest Territories. Transair has scheduled route systems in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. Transair employs about 700 persons.

Together the companies provide air service to more than 50 communities in Western Canada and the North.

The merger application aims at a single financially sound regional air carrier serving the four Western provinces and the North, the company said in a prepared statement.

Controllers End Action

QUEBEC (CP) — Air traffic controllers here have ended their work-to-rule campaign after management lifted a suspension against one of their colleagues.

The protest began a week ago Monday when one of the controllers had his federal licence suspended for two weeks after an investigation into a report by an Air Canada pilot of a near-collision with a private airplane last December.

Other controllers protested by observing safety regulations to the letter — including maximum separation between aircraft. The suspended controller now has returned to his job pending further investigation of the near miss.

Normand Dyck, president of the Quebec City local of the Canadian Air Traffic Control Association, said the federal transport department will allow the controller and union representatives to take part in a new hearing, which will be the third so far in the case.

The controller originally had his licence suspended pending an investigation immediately after the incident in December.

Probe Keeps CUSO on Edge

OTTAWA (CP) — The future of Canadian University Service Overseas (CUSO) appears to hang in the balance as the federal agency which funds it continues an investigation into the volunteer group's finances and activities.

"I guess we feel threatened," Sharon Capeling, public affairs director, said in an interview.

CUSO has still not received assurances the Canadian International Development Agency (CIDA) will continue funding its work in developing countries. CUSO sends teachers, doctors, technicians and other experts to work in poor nations.

Michel Dupuy, CIDA president, said a few moments earlier the results of his study into CUSO will likely not be known until the end of this month.

Dupuy would not say what kinds of changes he envisages in the relationship between his agency and CUSO, the subject of both financial and political controversies.

CUSO is a private organization which receives 95 per cent of its funds from CIDA. Last year, the agency received about $11 million and is requesting a similar amount his year.

Meanwhile, CUSO appears to be in limbo, as 30 volunteers destined for foreign postings await the results of CIDA's study.

Capeling said CIDA delayed giving CUSO funds last year for several months, forcing CUSO to borrow money from a bank to finance some its activities.

Similar delays had occurred in the last four of five years, she said.

Testifying before the Commons external affairs committee, Dupuy said there are some "internal problems in CUSO."

However, he said he still "appreciates the excellent work of CUSO."

Controversies at CUSO began last year when the group's French-language division passed a resolution calling for the "liberation of political prisoners" in Quebec.

The English-language side of the group did not endorse the resolution but has suffered from it, Capeling said.

"That resolution was right out of line," she said. "It was an embarrassment to everybody."

A few months later, Robin Wilson, CUSO executive director, was fired allegedly for having lost the confidence of the staff. Three members of the 20-person board of directors resigned following Wilson's firing.

There have also been complaints in some government circles CUSO was not handling its finances properly.

Capeling said CUSO has proposed some changes to reduce its administrative costs so more of its funds are spent overseas.

Andrew Brewin, the New Democratic Party external affairs critic, proposed a motion at the Commons committee expressing a vote of confidence in the group.

However, the committee lacked a quorum and could not vote on Brewin's motion.

Maclean's Ad Revenue Soars

OTTAWA (CP) — Maclean's magazine raised its advertising revenues to $12 million in 1978 from $5.5 million in 1975, says the secretary of state's department.

It was quoting from a report it commissioned on the impact of a 1975 law passed by Parliament to protect Canadian publications by removing tax benefits on advertising in foreign periodicals.

Under the law, advertisers could no longer deduct money paid for advertising from their income tax.

Aimed primarily at Time magazine, the law sought to correct a situation in which Time and Reader's Digest collected over half the domestic advertising revenues earned by 13 member magazines of the Magazine Association of Canada.

"In the first year after the bill, Time's gross advertising revenue dropped from $10.5 million to $3.5 million," the report said.

Saturday Night, then struggling against going out of print, doubled its advertising revenue during 1976-77, it adds.

The report warns however that Time's new operation of reprinting its U.S. edition in Canada which attracted $7 million in 1978 could be copied by other American magazines.

Concludes the report:

"It (the new law) has supported a view put forward by various studies of the periodical industry in Canada: That the writing and editing of news and opinion in Canada should be in the hands of Canadians."

Moose Jaw Man Rues Countryside 'Invasion'

CHAMBERLAIN, Sask. (CP) — The public advisory committee of the Qu'Appelle Implementation Board has been told to forget tourism schemes and leave the farmers alone.

"Let the general public stay at home in Moose Jaw and Regina instead of crowding up the country with their cottages," H. A. Wilfong of Moose Jaw told the committee, set up to deal with recreation and tourism for the valley.

"People cause congestion."

Ken Butler of the River Park Nordic Ski Club asked the committee to consider a hiking and cross-country ski trail in the Buffalo Pound area.

Al Langstaff, president of the Saskatchewan Snow Vehicles Association, pressed the committee for a long recreational corridor in which trails could be developed.

Harold Wilfong of the Moose Jaw Snow Drifters Club said Saskatchewan communities along the valley would benefit greatly from revenues spent by snowmobilers. "If 10 per cent of 135,000 snowmobilers use the area there will be a potential gas and oil sale of $81,000 on any good weekend."

He said there are 348,300 snowmobile users in the province.

Tom Motta, president of the Saskatchewan Wildlife Federation, asked the committee to consider water quality as the first priority.

It should deal with flood control, a comprehensive wildlife management program, Indian historical sites and a valley road that could be developed into an all weather scenic route, he said.

Catherine Letkeman of the Moose Jaw Natural History Society said three trails should be developed that could be used as an educational base with hostels, shelters and primitive campsites being developed along the valley.

Relics Rekindling Pride

GLEICHEN, Alta. (CP) — Blackfoot elder Richard Brass almost sold his peace pipes and medicine bundles for a lot of cash several years ago.

But a dream of an otter telling him that he had come back home persuaded Brass to change his mind and not give up the relics to provincial officials.

Brass, 80, is one of the few Blackfoot elders who still has sacred objects vital to traditional religious ceremonies.

Through the years, artifacts were given up for small loans or a few dollars in cash payment. One sacred object originally sold for $10 wound up in a European museum, where it is valued at $10,000.

But in late January, 562 artifacts came back to the Blackfoot reserve 70 kilometres east of Calgary, returned to the band on "permanent loan."

A private collector from Calgary had bought the items in the 1960s and sold them to the National Museum of Man in 1977 for a price estimated at more than $150,000. A federal official declined to give the exact figure for fear of jeopardizing future sales, but said: "You can't put a price on most of this material."

The artifacts — up to 100 years old — include clothing, tools, arrowheads, religious objects and musical instruments. They have gone into a Blackfoot museum set up on the third floor of a local community college.

Cultural officials say many of the objects belonged to tribal members who still are alive, and it is hoped that the sight of the once-familiar items will spark memories of unrecorded aspects of Blackfoot life, like family trees, language, music, myth and magic.

Brass, an elder of the tribe's Horn Society, says through an interpreter that he is happy to see the artifacts returned, for the same reason he has kept his own pipes and medicine bundles — for his family.

"People might say other things," says his wife Emma, "but there's something there and something in them that gives you a very special help."

The objects are under the care of curator Russell Wright, who says their arrival already has provided some spiritual uplift to the Blackfoot people.

"When people are going through trying times like they have been recently, it means a whole new beginning.

"We'll be going deeply into the culture of our ancestors, and take the best of that and adapt it to a better future . . . .

"At the powwows, we're beginning to see more and more of our young people. The dance groups are very active. Young people are searching for something, some means of identity."

The most prized pieces in the collection are 44 religious objects, notably the ceremonial garments and medicine bundles of the Horn and Old Ladies societies.

"Catholics need a chalice for mass," says Chief Leo Pretty Young Man. "We can't celebrate without a bundle."

Fish Rink Is Supplying Confirmation of Class

Until proved otherwise, Darren Fish of Edmonton skips a rink that is the class of the annual Pepsi Cola Canadian junior men's curling championship being played at Victoria Curling Club.

That honor goes automatically at first with his role of defending champion and, if confirmation was needed, Fish has supplied that with a 5-0 record in this year's playoffs to date. And no other foursome can match that mark.

Sure, Fish is on probation by the Canadian Curling Association for past misbehaviour with the warning that the rink mustn't do anything wrong again, on the ice or off, or suffer the consequences.

But he feels his rink had outlived that rap even though "we probably deserved everything we got" at the time.

"We behaved ourselves at the World Junior at Moose Jaw and we will behave here," he said. "We want to win and get to Kitchener for next year's World Junior and win the championship that got away this year."

This year, Fish and his rink (with two changes from the one that is competing here) finished third in the World after topping the round-robin part of the championship before losing to Scotland in the semi-final.

And junior rinks be warned — Fish will be around for yet another bid for a championship in 1980. His present rink of third Wes Johnson, second Murray Ursulak and lead Barry Barker has one more full season of junior eligibility while Ursulak has two.

Fish feels he has the best foursome here and Mert Thompsett's rink from Manitoba is the one to beat. Fish meets Thompsett on the last regularly-scheduled draw Friday morning, with the playoffs to follow.

"If there's any problem, we may be too lazy," he said of his own group. "And we can't afford to be if we want to win."

But there's more to Fish than that.

He has an unique delivery for a youngster. He rejects the norm and doesn't lift the rock on delivery. He's a pusher and got that way because, when he started curling, he couldn't lift the stone anyway.

"I was 11, just about to turn 12, and weighed only 69 pounds," he said. "So I started that way, it hasn't hurt me, so why change? Besides it has been proven scientifically better than the accepted way?"

Fish has another favorite sport after curling. It is horse racing. Believe it or not, he is a handicapper . . . and, by his own admission (a trademark of all handicappers), a good one.

Last year he did scratches and selections for the Edmonton Journal and had the best winning percentage of all the thoroughbred selectors.

Not bad for an 18-year-old. Matter of fact he would be handicapping right now if it wasn't for curling.

"I love the thoroughbreds," he said, while admitting to making a dollar or two wagering on his own selections. That avocation started about the same time he began curling. When he was 12, he got a $2 bet down on a horse called Golden Compass, it won and returned $6.10. He was hooked.

He is nicknamed "jaws" because he would like to be a radio announcer. And he is covering the championship here for an Edmonton radio station.

"I can't take it right off the top yet," he said of his voice reports. "I have to write them out first, but I'm trying."

And, if you are a horsey fan and want a long shot chance for the Preakness, try Pole Position. This three-year old isn't eligible for the Kentucky Derby but recently won the San Felipe Handicap at Santa Anita in the track record time of 1:41 1/5 while beating the west coast top pick for the Derby, Flying Paster.

Don't take my word for it. Take Fish's. Pole Position is owned by the El Dorado stable and from his part of the country.

And you never thought you'd get a horse tip from a curling championship did you? And maybe a winner at that.

Islanders are Finding Range; Talk of Going 'All the Way'

By BILL WALKER

Only Alberta remained undefeated in the Canadian junior men's curling championship at the Victoria Curling Club Tuesday, but Prince Edward Island put in a big bid for recognition and may be heard from the rest of the week.

Darren Fish of Edmonton won all three of his games to run Alberta's record to 5-0 while Peter Jenkins of Charlottetown is probably wondering where he might be if he had a couple of shots to play over again.

Jenkins, who lost that 2-1 heartbreaker to Warren Proctor of Saskatchewan, Monday night, also won three games to bring his record to 3-2, good for fourth place.

Fish handed Proctor his first setback, 7-4, spotted Phillip Gilks of New Brunswick at 3-0 lead before breaking out for a 12-5 victory and finished the day's work with a 9-6 win over Paul Chisholm of Nova Scotia, marked by a steal of three in the eighth.

Jenkins, who lost his tournament opener to Northern Ontario when he missed a first-round draw that enabled David St. Louis to steal four in a 7-2 win, and then allowed Saskatchewan to steal the winning point in that 2-1 loss, also on opening day, said: "We got the breaks today that we haven't been getting all along. My rink is curling well and if they can continue, I think we can go all the way."

Jenkins, a second-year business student at the University of P.E.I., upset previously-unbeaten Cunningham in the afternoon draw with three steals of two for a 9-4 victory.

Earlier he had defeated Mike Moss of the Territories 6-5. On the final draw, he got by Gilks with a last-rock takeout for an 8-5 victory.

Cunningham handed Thompsett his first loss, 4-2, before losing to P.E.I. Then he bombed Stacey Coomber of B.C. 11-3 on the strength of a six ender in the sixth end.

Thompsett, in turn, rebounded from his initial setback to defeat St. Louis 7-2 and Moss, 10-2.

Proctor remained in the running by winning two games, both handily. After being beaten by Fish, he defeated Denis Marchand of Quebec 9-4 and Nick Rizzo of Ontario, 10-5.

Despite his loss, Marchand kept Quebec in the playoff picture with two victories. He trimmed Nova Scotia 9-4 in the morning and then kept the fans late with an extra end 6-5 win over Northern Ontario at night.

Marchand stole three successive points on the ninth, 10th and 11th ends for the pressure-packed win.

It was Northern Ontario's second extra-end game of the day, as St. Louis edged Ontario 6-5 in the morning.

Quebec is tied with P.E.I. at 3-2 while B.C., Northern Ontario and Ontario are 2-3.

Coomber of B.C., who lost his first two games Monday rebounded to win a pair. He trimmed Gilks 8-3 and followed with an 8-5 victory over the Territories before running into Cunningham.

Gilks had to use spare Barry Moore of Victoria in two games.

Key games this afternoon found Saskatchewan playing Manitoba and Alberta going against Newfoundland. Tonight P.E.I. goes against Alberta in what is a vital game for both rinks.

Martin Wins Sixth; Sparkes Edges U.S.

VERNON (CP) — Dorothy McKenzie feels her Winnipeg rink is due for a good game at the Canadian senior women's curling championship — and she is going to need one today.

Manitoba takes on Flora Martin of Victoria, who had a bye Tuesday night but still held the lead with a 6-0 record after seven draws.

McKenzie is tied for second with Fern Seel of Moose Jaw, Sask., and Gwen Gibson of Quebec City, with 5-2 marks.

The Manitoba skip, runner-up in the 1978 championship, defeated Jean Beardsley of Ottawa 13-8 in the seventh draw after losing to Alice Crawford of Calgary 7-5 in the sixth.

In other seventh-round games, Seel took a 10-5 win over Jennie Boomhower of Charlottetown; Doreen Blair of Fredericton defeated Carmel McGrory of St. John's 8-3; Gibson edged Crawford 10-9 in 11 ends; and Dorothy Robeson of Truro, N.S., beat Beverley Reber of Yellowknife 9-6.

Martin won her sixth round game over Beardsley 9-6. She scored one in the seventh end to tie the game, then stole one in each of the eighth, ninth and 10th ends.

PERTH, Scotland (CP) — Skip Lindsay Sparkes and her Canadian rink from North Vancouver tightened the standings in the women's world invitational curling championship today with a 3-1 decision over the United States.

It was an excellent takeout game in which Canada opened the scoring with a single point in the second end of the eighth-round match. Nancy Langley of Seattle, Wash., blanked the next four ends, but the move backfired when Canada stole one in the seventh and one in the eighth for a 3-0 margin.

The Americans scored once in the ninth, but ran out of rocks in the 10th.

Sweden's Brigitta Torn and the U.S. share first place with 6-1 records. Sweden won its sixth game with a 10-3 decision over Janet Forrest of England.

Canada was at 5-2, while Scotland's Beth Lindsay and Paulette Delachat of France were 5-3.

In other eighth-round games, France surprised Scotland 8-5, Switzerland defeated Norway 9-7 and West Germany beat Italy 10-2.

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — Three teams were tied for first going into the seventh round today at the Canadian mixed curling championship.

Bob Widdis of Ontario lost sole possession of the lead in the sixth round Tuesday, dropping a 6-4 decision to Roy Lund of Northern Ontario.

The win moved Lund's foursome into a tie for first at 5-1 with Ken May of Saskatchewan and Ontario.

Saskatchewan lost its first game to Northern Ontario but the rink has come back with five consecutive victories. On Tuesday, it beat Nova Scotia's Lowell Goulden 7-3 and Roger Goss of Prince Edward Island 6-2.

Ontario defeated Ivan Carlisle of Port Alberni 8-7 in an extra end. Carlisle also lost to Alberta's Lyle Davis 8-4.

Late Breaker Surge Submerges Cool Cats

By ERNIE FEDORUK
Times Staff

Victoria Cougar netminders might be thankful that Len Dies doesn't shoot more often. Otherwise, Tuesday's Western Hockey League result at Memorial Arena might have been more embarassing than it was for coach Jack Shupe and his Cool Cats.

On top by a 5-2 margin at one stage and still leading 6-4 with less than 12 minutes to play, the Cougars blew their advantages and a chance to secure second place in the Western Division by bowing 7-6 to Seattle Breakers.

Unable to beat the Cougars in their first 13 meetings, the Breakers thus completed their series with Victoria by winning the final three games.

And it was Dies, the non-shooter, who gunned the Cougars down.

He scored three goals for his first hat-trick in two seasons.

"His trouble," said Seattle coach Don Ward, "is that he doesn't shoot enough. He likes to pass off, yet he has a great wrist shot."

But Dies' shooting Tuesday wasn't the kind that impressed anyone. His first goal was a passout from behind the Victoria net that was inadvertantly misdirected into the goal by Steve Amiss; Cougars' starting netminder.

The second goal, which resulted in Kevin Eastman replacing Amiss, was an ever-so-slight deflection of defenceman Dale Pilon's ice-slider from the point.

His third and 35th of the season was, indeed, a quick wrist shot fired almost directly at Eastman but somehow finding the back of the goal.

But for 1,758 fans on hand, Dies' "sharpshooting" wasn't important. Of greater concern was Victoria's lackadaisical performance exactly seven days before opening the playoffs. Against a team that didn't qualify for the round-robin semi-finals, it was hardly an impressive performance.

Defensively, the Cougars were almost brutal.

Winners of only two of their last seven games, there was a lack of cohesion between forwards and rearguards. Head-manning the puck, a good tactic, almost never happened. And etcetera.

In defence of the defencemen, it must be admitted that the puck did take many strange turns and bounces during the evening. The strange bounces generally went Seattle's way.

Forwards Greg Adams and Brad Palmer were the brightest plus factors for the Cougars. Adams scored two smart goals and Palmer managed only one assist but put plenty of zip-and-vinegar into his skating.

Bob Jansch, Geordie Robertson, Torrie Robertson and Brad Yachimec scored Victoria's other goals.

BRIEFLY: Cougars played without Todd Morton and Randy Irving . . . Both joined Tony Feltrin on the injured list . . . Morton has been sidelined for at least two weeks because of pulled ligaments in his left leg . . . Irving had a thumb nail removed this week but should be ready for Tuesday's opening playoff game against New Westminster Bruins . . . Errol Rausse, Seattle's leading scorer, missed the game because of flu.

Cougars play in Portland Friday and then wind up the regular season by meeting Medicine Hat Tigers here Saturday . . . Golf professional Cec Ferguson was, by far, the most productive shooter . . . He won $450 by firing the puck into the centre of the Scoro board between periods . . . WHL president Ed Chynoweth and Vancouver Canuck executive Babe Pratt will be guests at Cougars' second annual awards dinner, to be held at the Leonardo Da Vinci Centre this evening.

Cowens Sidelined

BOSTON (AP) — Player-coach Dave Cowens, who suffered a severe ankle sprain Sunday, will be sidelined for several National Basketball Association games.

"I can't even put my right foot on the floor," said Cowens, who is on crutches. "It will be at least a week before I can move. I'd say I'll be out 10 days to two weeks."

Bob McAdoo was expected to fill in for Cowens in the pivot, as the departed for games this week in Seattle and Denver.

Caps, Wings Pesky

By Canadian Press

For Washington Capitals and Detroit Red Wings, their playoff chances barely detectable without the aid of a microscope, it's fun time in the National Hockey League.

All of a sudden, the Red Wings, last in the NHL's Norris Division and third-last in the entire league, are riding a four-game winning streak. And the Caps, barely ahead of Detroit, are stealing points from contending clubs that can ill afford to lose them.

Chicago Black Hawks, leaders of the Smythe Division, were Detroit's latest victims as the Red Wings defeated them 5-3 Tuesday night to sweep a home-and-home series and extend Chicago's current string of losses to five.

And New York Rangers, fighting to stay ahead of Philadelphia and Atlanta in the battle for second place in the Patrick Division, needed a goal by Phil Esposito with five seconds remaining to salvage a 2-2 tie against the pesky Capitals.

Meanwhile Los Angeles Kings, one of the three teams still mathematically within range of the Wings and Caps, clambered a little closer to safety with a 4-3 vicory over Atlanta Flames.

"This team still has a lot of heart and zest," said Detroit coach Bobby Kromm as Detroit, with three wins and a tie, got through a season without losing to Chicago for the first time in 53 years.

Hailed as a club with great potential when they beat Montreal Canadiens in their own rink before bowing to the Stanley Cup champions in the quarter-finals last spring, the Red Wings had given their fans little to cheer about until they went back to Montreal March 12, came away with a 3-3 tie and won their next four games.

"It's been a long time coming," said Kromm. "We played exceptionally well tonight.

The Black Hawks gave up three early goals, two of them by rookie Dan Labraaten, but battled back and threatened to tie the game until Reed Larson's empty-net goal nailed down the victory with less than a minute remaining.

The Capitals, who have never made the playoffs since they came into the league in 1974, have also made life miserable for some of the contenders in recent weeks. They held Montreal to a 2-2 tie, damaged Minnesota's playoff hopes with a 5-4 victory and grabbed a point in Buffalo Sunday night as the Sabres struggled to pull away from Toronto in their battle for second place in the Adams Division.

Injured Skier Still in Coma

BURLINGTON, Vt. (Reuter) — Italian skier Leonard David remains in a coma following brain surgery, but hospital officials reported Monday that "he has shown some signs of responding to his environment."

The 18-year-old skier, injured in a fall during a men's World Cup downhill race March 3 at Lake Placid, N.Y., underwent a two-hour operation at the Burlington Medical Centre several hours later.

Rennell Sound Logging Shouldn't Be Permitted

Some rambling notes along the trail:

The situation now developing near Rennell Sound in the Queen Charlotte Island is ludicrous to say the least . . . On one hand, we have federal fisheries pledged to enforce the long-awaited but as-yet-untested teeth in the new Fisheries Act by intituting a ban on logging the steep slide-prone hillsides of Riley Creek . . . And, on the other, we have the provincial forest service prompting Q.C. Timber Ltd. to go ahead and log the area despite the danger . . . As a side issue, we have a spokesman for the timber company suggesting an area could be test-logged to resolve the debate . . . If there is even a slight chance the slope will slide once the trees have been removed, logging shouldn't take place . . . Any "experimenting" would doubtless serve the needs of the timber company far more than the fisheries resource and might set a dangerous legal precedent . . . Depleting a major pink salmon run for an undetermined (but probably lengthy) period of time just to log a few trees doesn't seem like a great trade-off . . . And, as far as the jurisdictional dispute goes, taxpayers are footing the bill for both sides of the battle . . . We should have a say in the matter.

John Cowlin of Victoria has been elected president of the Island Mountain Ramblers at their annual general meeting Sunday in Nanaimo . . . John Symon of Nanaimo was picked as vice-president, Brian Johnson of Victoria became treasurer and Pat Leahy of Nanaimo is the new secretary.

A recent letter to the editor suggested we should concentrate more on protecting and re-establishing populations of our rare Vancouver Island marmot rather than introducing an exotic species like mountain goats . . . The thought of protection is commendable and steps are now being taken in this direction . . . However, there might be some good reasons marmots can't be re-established in their former territory because of man's interference with the habitat . . . In any case, the two animals would be compatible . . . The mountain goats introduced to Olympic National Park from British Columbia get along quite well with the species of marmot endemic to that region.

Speaking about transplants to alpine areas of the Island . . . How about bringing in a few Golden trout to stock now-barren alpine lakes? . . . They should survive well and provide recreational opportunities where none now exist.

Larry Cuthbert boated a 15-pound, seven-ounce chinook salmon Sunday to take first place in the monthly Frostbite Derby for Chinook Club members of the Victoria-Saanich Inlet Anglers' Association . . . Frank Jenvey (9:03) was second and Karl Leong (7:00) third . . . Hidden-weight winners were Ron Perks, Mickey Queale, Steve Purych, Wally Fenske and Garry Vaughan.

We see the sport fishery advisory board to federal fisheries supports the concept of increasing the minimum size limit to 18 inches for chinook salmon but is opposed to proposals to ban the use of treble and barbed hooks . . . The board, which makes non-binding recommendations to the department, represents 350,000 recreational anglers in B.C. as well as commercial interests such as motels and marinas . . . While it appears to be a case of making the tourist industry and sports fishermen suffer for the sake of commercial fishing interests, commerical fishermen are also facing new restrictions to help conserve several threatened fish stocks . . . Comments are still being sought on the sport fishing regulations and may be submitted to: Public Information Branch, Fisheries and Oceans, Vancouver, B.C. V6E 2P1.

Ottawa Shuffle Cuts Cash Flow

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal government will restructure its fitness and amateur sport branch, and for some recreation groups it could mean the end of federal money.

Sports Minister Iona Campagnolo said Tuesday that sport Canada will remain as a overseer of national programs for world-class athletes but the recreation side will be divided into Recreation Canada and Fitness Canada.

She was speaking to reporters after releasing copies of a discussion paper on a national policy for fitness and recreation.

The paper says that for the fiscal year starting in April the government will provide funds only for the national activities. Groups will be encouraged to seek private support.

Campagnolo said she would like to see more emphasis on recreation for special groups such as native people, children, the elderly and the disabled.

The provinces have demanded that Ottawa pull out of the recreation field. To respond to that request, Recreation Canada will be confined to relaying information on leisure-time physical activities and providing funds for national recreational groups.

Fitness Canada is described in the discussion paper as a co-ordinator for groups motivating Canadians to become fit, a promoter of physical fitness and a developer of programs and facilities which encourage fitness.

When the provinces demanded last year that Ottawa withdraw from recreation, it appeared the recreation branch would wither away.

Campagnolo said her agency has been instructed to keep its involvement in recreation at a peripheral level. But a special committee has been formed to advise on what activities Ottawa could undertake in recreation and fitness.

"Our sole intention is to act as a clearing house for the various commentaries on the state of national fitness and physical recreation," Campagnolo said. "Fitness and amateur sport is prepared to act as a catalyst in concert with the provinces and recreation organizations."

"Can I change channels?"

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) — Maine Mariners are deciding whether to appeal an American Hockey League ruling that Maine's March 10 victory over Hershey Bears must be forfeited and the two points awarded to Hershey.

'Sicksers' Get Well To Blast the Spurs

By Associated Press

Things had turned so sour for Philadelphia '76ers that they were being called the Sicksers.

On Tuesday night, the Sicksers got well against San Antonio Spurs, beating the National Basketball Association's Central Division leaders 124-120.

"We turned it around and won it," said a happy Billy Cunningham, the '76ers' coach who has been taking a lot of the heat for Philadelphia's slump. "This was the type of game we were losing during our bad stretch — the tight games in the last three minutes."

This time, the '76ers asserted themselves — instead of dying — down the stretch.

After San Antonio tied the score 112-112 with 2:06 remaining, Julius Erving hit a layup, giving Philadelphia the lead for good. Then Doug Collins, who returned to action last week after missing 25 games because of foot surgery, clinched the victory with six straight free throws in the final 14 seconds.

Elsewhere, Washington Bullets blitzed New Orleans Jazz 126-107, Denver Nuggets whipped Golden State Warriors 113-102, Atlanta Hawks downed Cleveland Cavaliers 115-109, New York Knicks topped Milwaukee Bucks 118-110, New Jersey Nets defeated Detroit Pistons 117-110 and Portland Trail Blazers stopped San Diego Clippers, 115-109.

Liverpool Increases Worries of Wolves

Goals by Terry McDermott and David Johnson sent Liverpool four points clear at the top of the First Division and also increased the relegation worries of Wolverhampton.

Wolves, beaten only once in their last six away games, were hit by McDermott's 36th minute effort. Then Johnson finished off a four-man move in the 49th minute.

Coventry produced its best soccer of the season to beat Manchester United 4-3 and record its first home success this year.

United was a goal down within the first minute when Barry Powell netted Tommy Hutchison's cross, then Garry Thomson added a second in the eighth minute.

Steve Coppell scored the first of his two goals to revive United but Hutchison and Bobby McDonald put Coventry in command with goals each side of half time. Sammy McIlroy hit united's third goal from a free kick.

Queen's Park Rangers fight for First-Division survival was ealt a further blow by Aston Villa, which won 3-1.

Brighton increased its lead in the Second Division to three points when Peter Ward collected both goals in the 2-1 triumph at Bristol against the Rovers.

Watford's hopes for the Third Division title took a knock when Swansea beat them 3-2. Watford also had defender Steve Sims sent off.

At Moenechengladbach, West Germany, Borussia Moenechengladbach finally ended its English jinx when it bounced Manchester City out of the UEFA Cup competition.

Golas by Christian Kulik, Hans-Guenter Bruns and Karl Delhaye had sealed the English club's fate with 20 minutes still to play.

The Manchester club pulled one back in the 79th minute through Polish substitute Kazimierz Deyna — with Brian Kidd and Colin Bell, one of three international, on the city bench — but by then it was a long lost cause for the English, whose defence had been cut to ribbons by the sprightly Germans.

The victory was all the sweeter for Borussia, the 1975 UEFA Cup champions, because English teams always have beaten them in the past. Liverpool beat Borussia in the European Cup final two years ago and in the semi-finals last year.

Caps Tackle Stars Tonight

Vancouver Whitecaps of the North American Soccer League will attempt to get a winning margin on their pre-season record tonight when they tackle Vancouver Island League All-Stars in the fifth annual Victoria Cup exhibition match at Royal Athletic Park.

Game time is 7.

Whitecaps, who are 1-1 in pre-season play this season and open their schedule against Dallas Tornado on Mar. 30, will have to meet the All-Stars without the guidance of coach Tony Waiters.

British professional Bob McNab will fill in for Waiters, who along with team president John Best is in England attempting to sign winger Willie Johnston of West Bromwich Albion.

Johnson was the Scottish international who was sent home from the World Cup in Argentina last year after failing a drug test.

McNab, a former captain and defender with Arsenal of the English League first division, spent last season on the coaching staff of the London-based club and was hired to replace Alan Hinton as Waiters' assistant.

Whitecaps have won the Victoria Cup three times and All-Stars managed to upset the professionals in 1977.

Soccer Union Plans Tests

BERN, Switzerland (AP) — A select group of doctors, lawyers and soccer experts has been set up by the European Football Union (UEFA) to make spot doping checks before major European matches.

A UEFA release said the group's executive committee decided in Bucharest earlier this month to form the commission to make possible checks "at important UEFA matches."

Babe Ruth Baseball

Final registration session for players (16 to 18 years) wishing to play baseball in the Victoria Firefighters Senior Babe Ruth League is scheduled March 25 at Henderson Park, from 2 to 4 p.m.

TOO STRICT WITH ME, CLAIMS ILIE

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — "I didn't do even half of what I do normally tonight," said Ilie Nastase after being disqualified in his first-round match for what the umpire called an obscene gesture in the $175,000 New Orleans Tennis Festival.

When the forfeit was announced Tuesday night, the court was quickly buried in crumpled paper cups and other objects thrown from the stands. Many members of the crowd of almost 5,000 charged the court, and at least one fight broke out between spectators.

"The chair umpire was simply enforcing the rule," said Dick Roberson, supervisor of the Grand Prix of Tennis event. "Nastase knows that the first step is a point penalty; the next step is a game penalty, and the next step is a default."

Nastase's third run-in with officials came in the third set when he was leading 3-1. He made another gesture and was disqualified.

"I didn't give it to anybody, I gave it to myself," Nastase said.

"They were too strict with me. They defaulted me too fast. The guys are not flexible, especially with me."

Draft Key to Merger Talks

CHICAGO (AP) — Expansion, a topic which seems to have more lives than a cat with insurance, once again will be discussed by the National Hockey League's board of governors today.

Proposed admission of the World Hockey Association's New England Whalers, Edmonton Oilers, Quebec Nordiques and Winnipeg Jets was voted down at a governors meeting in Key Largo, Fla., on March 8. But the so-called "dead issue," which fell one positive vote short of acceptance at Key Largo, has worked its way back to the meeting room.

The indication that Montreal Canadiens and Vancouver Canucks now will vote favorably on the proposal forced reopening of the talks. The Canadiens and Canucks had been among the five teams which left the matter one vote short of acceptance in Florida.

But officials of those teams offered little indication the proposal is certain to pass this time around.

"We have always been in favor of expansion, providing the terms of that expansion are reasonable," said Irving Grundman, executive vice-president of the Canadiens, "but we can't have something forced down our throats."

The Canadiens' major objection to the Florida proposal was over the expansion draft which would stock the incoming clubs. The teams would join the NHL, effective next season, with the WHA ceasing operation.

Few details of the draft could be ascertained, but sources said it would be conducted in the following manner:

Each incoming club would protect two skaters and two goaltenders. Unprotected players who have been drafted by NHL teams would become property of those NHL teams. The NHL teams then would protect 15 skaters and two goalies, with the remaining players becoming available for selection by the four incoming clubs.

Grundman said the Canadiens would be hurt most by such a draft, since they own the NHL rights to about 30 WHA players — not to mention the dozens of players in the Montreal farm system.

"This kind of draft would affect the calibre and quality of the top five or six teams in the NHL," said Grundman, who said his club could not vote in favor of the proposal unless the draft and other details were modified.

Canucks president Frank Griffiths expressed a similar feeling.

"We wanted to vote 'Yes,' but we required modifications to some of the terms in the resolution presented to us (in Florida)," he said.

While there was doubt about the votes of the two clubs, there was none whatsoever where Boston Bruins and Toronto Maple Leafs were concerned. Both teams, outspoken opponents of expansion since talks began, again will vote "No."

Bruins president Paul Mooney said Tuesday he would consider legal action against his NHL partners if the expansion was accepted. Maple Leafs owner Harold Ballard said he would "fight to my last bullet" to defeat the propocal.

"I lie awake nights thinking about this," Ballard said in a telephone interview. "I've been working for years trying to pound some sense into these dummies (on the board of governors), but they won't listen.

"No matter which way the vote goes, I'm voting no. I'm convinced we haven't got our own league in shape enough to take on more parasites," said Ballard.

The anti-expansion axis also includes Los Angeles Kings, leaving that power bloc two votes short of defeating the issue again.

OREGON STATE PAYING FIRST VISIT

Victoria Rowers Facing Big Week

By JIM CRERAR
Times Staff

This is a key week for rowers in Victoria and in particular for coach Al Morrow up at UVic.

The lead-off event is tonight at UVic where the Victoria Rowing Society holds its first meeting, a preliminary gathering of officials from the B.C. Rowing Association, UVic and the Victoria City Rowing Club to lay plans for the sport's future in this area.

It continues Thursday for 68 rowers at UVic when Oregon State, the third-ranked rowing school on the Pacific Coast, pays a first-ever visit to Victoria for a dual regatta on Elk Lake against Morrow's hopefuls. The regatta, consisting of seven events, starts at 3:45 p.m. and continues until dark.

It ends Saturday on Burnaby Lake in Burnaby with the most important competition on the spring calendar for both the men's and women's teams at UVic. That one is the UBC invitational which has attracted top-rated University of Washington Huskies, Washington State, Oregon State, UBC, UVic and several smaller U.S. colleges, among them Pacific Lutheran, Puget Sound, Seattle Pacific and Western Washington.

"That'll be a big one," Morrow said Tuesday. "We'll really know where we stand after that."

JOHN HAMMOND
. . . UVic captain

But Morrow may get an idea after the regatta Thursday here against Oregon State, coached by Dr. Karl Drlica, considered the dean of rowing on the west coast after a career spanning 40 years.

Oregon State, traditionally ranked with Washington and the University of California at Berkley, expects to have 74 rowers at Elk Lake, a prospect that has Morrow truly excited.

"Just the fact that they're coming here is an indication we're putting UVic on the intercollegiate rowing map," he bubbled. "I'm really very pleased about this."

His only worry is that all of Thursday's events are for eights and UVic has only one eights shell.

"All seven of our crews will row in the same shell, which perhaps is a commentary on the state of our equipment."

There's not much wrong with the state of the UVic personnel, however. Morrow has almost twice as many rowers on the team this year than last, both men and women.

Thursday's events include men's and women's varsity, light and novice eights and junior varsity eights for men only. The men will row over the 2,000-metre course and the women over 1,000 metres.

BRENDA COOK
. . . a top prospect

Top UVic prospects are rowing captain John Hammond, 21, a fourth-year arts and science major from Shawnigan Lake School, in varsity eights; Andrew Cartwright, 20, second-year arts and science from Victoria, light and varsity eights; Brenda Cook, 21, fourth-year arts and science from Regina, varsity eights, and Sheila Serup, 19, second-year arts and science from Prince George and Brentwood College, varsity eights.

All four loom large in Morrow's plans for this summer.

"It's going to take two years to start turning out people for the national team," he explained. "We've made a good start, though. I think we had a very successful fall. We won the points trophies at two of the regattas we competed in (the Elk Lake fall regatta and the Green Lake women's regatta in Seattle). We also scored numerous individual victories.

"One of our goals for this summer is to put as many UVic people as possible on the B.C. team going to the nationals in Welland (Ont.) the first weekend in August."

The UVic rowers also plan to remain in the Niagara area for the Canadian Henley in St. Catharines the following week and will cap their summer schedule by competing in the Western Canada Games in Saskatoon the third weekend of August.

As for the Victoria Rowing Society, its formation will provide an umbrella administrative body to develop southern Vancouver Island into a major rowing centre.

Meanwhile, tonight's preliminary meeting will be attended by B.C. Rowing Association President John Ellis of Victoria and Lief Gotfredsen, Victoria City rowing coach who also represents the BCRA; John Alexander, president of the Victoria City rowers and the club's vice-president, Rick McDougall; UVic Vice-President Trevor Mathews and Ted Sawchuck, director of student and ancillery services.

Wright Captures National Berth

Lawrence Wright of the Victoria Amateur Swim Club collected a berth in the Canadian swimming championships later this year in Edmonton by placing second in the 100-metre backstroke event at the Western Division II spring championship meet in Saskatoon at the weekend.

Wright, 16, achieved national ranking with a time of 1:04.27 in the heats and then finished second to Darren Wilms of New Westminster with a 1:04.66 clocking in the final.

Two other VASC members — Stan Davis and Wayne Kelly — have received invitations to compete in the Pan American Games trials next week in Winnipeg.

Ont. Law Stays On Arab Boycott

TORONTO (CP) — A spokesman for Premier William Davis says the Ontario government has no intention of withdrawing legislation demanding that Ontario businesses not comply with the Arab trade boycott of Israel.

The province's Discriminatory Business Practices Act, which was given royal assent Nov. 9 and which provides for fines of up to $50,000, was criticized in Ottawa on Tuesday by federal Trade Minister Jack Horner.

Horner said he was concerned that the country is losing valuable export sales in Saudi Arabia as a result of what is perceived as a pro-Israel stance by the Ontario government.

"That legislation is costing us trade, causing difficulty in the bank fraternity and has businessmen very concerned," Horner said in an interview. "The Ontario legislation goes much farther than they (provincial authorities) intended."

He said he had not expressed these concerns to the Ontario government but feels businessmen in the province should approach Queen's Park with their complaints.

The Saudi Arabian embassy in Ottawa refused to comment on a published report that Ontario's response to the Arab boycott might result in Canada losing millions of dollars in Saudi contracts.

But Mohammed Qaadri, president of the Arab-Canada Chamber of Commerce, said a consortium of Canadian firms probably will lose a $1.2-billion contract to build a causeway between Saudi Arabia and the Persian Gulf island country of Bahrain.

Qaadri said the consortium was given an understanding it would get the contract but that Arabs since have decided to call tenders. He said he expects that the Canadian group will be under-bid.

Defence Minister Barney Danson, the only Jewish minister in the cabinet, said he was surprised the Saudis had singled out the Ontario legislation for their attack.

"It seems peculiar they would have chosen Ontario to go after when they haven't reacted to the much longer-standing anti-boycott legislation in the United States."

Since the Arab boycott was introduced in 1948 by the Arab League as an attempt to weaken the economy of Israel, the United States has been the only country to outlaw compliance.

Danson said the federal government is determined to pursue its efforts to beef up national anti-boycott legislation, although "no one is expecting the Arabs to be overjoyed."

A bill now before Parliament would make it mandatory for any Canadian company asked to participate in the boycott to report the request to the federal government.

Under existing law, a company need not tell the government about a boycott request unless it requires federal assistance in fulfilling an overseas contract. Any individual or business which agrees to boycott Israel loses all financial and administrative assistance from the government.

The legislation the government is proposing requires that every company disclose boycott request whether or not they wish government trade assistance.

The bill received first reading in December. In spite of frequent demands from former Liberal cabinet minister Herb Gray of Windsor, Ont., and Liberal back-bencher Bob Kaplan of York Centre, and Conservative House Leader Walter Baker; it has not yet come before the Commons for approval in principle.

TROUBLED WATERS confront Conservative MP Bob Corbet as he sits in the bow of a canoe running the Rideau River rapids near Carleton University in Ottawa. The MP for Fundy Royal, N.S., was taken for the ride by his aide, Kevin Darroch. Shooting the river's rapids when the spring runoff is at its highest is a favorite springtime sport in the nation's capital.

No Finances For Symphony

By PAUL WHITELAW
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — Secretary of State John Roberts, the federal minister responsible for cultural affairs, says his department has no money to help avert the threatened bankruptcy and closure of the Winnipeg Symphony Orchestra.

Roberts told the Commons Tuesday his department does not administer any program that would allow it to provide "operating support" for any of the country's symphonies, almost all of which are plagued by financial problems.

The Secretary of State noted that "at the federal level" the "only means" by which additional financial support could be given is through the Canada Council.

Roberts promised "to draw the attention of the Canada Council" to the plight of the Winnipeg orchestra.

However, a spokesman for the Ottawa-based Council said later: "We don't have an extra penny to give anybody."

Council information officer Barbara Klante noted in an interview that the federally-funded body has already agreed to give the Winnipeg orchestra $352,000 in the current 1978-79 fiscal year.

That subsidy amounts to an approximately 7 per cent increase over the $328,800 the orchestra received from the Council in 1977-78.

For funding purposes, the Council considers the Winnipeg orchestra to be one of the country's four "major" symphonies. The others are the symphonies of Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver.

Explaining the Council's inability to come up with any emergency funding, Klante noted that the federal government limited the increase in the Council's current budget "to about seven per cent."

Klante said that because of inflation, the Council actually has less money to work with than a year ago.

Roberts was asked by NDP MP Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) in the Commons whether the federal government could "combine" with the Manitoba government "to keep this (Winnipeg) orchestra alive."

Winnipeg 7 Hearing Set

WINNIPEG (CP) — Preliminary hearings are to be held in July in the cases of seven men — including CBC TV personality Allen Spraggett and Winnipeg Free Press publisher Richard C. Malone — who are charged with homosexual offences involving juveniles.

Crown counsel Greg Lawlor said Tuesday the preliminary hearings will be held separately for each of the accused persons. The earliest hearing begins July 2 and the latest starts July 30.

Shcharansky Plea Launched

OTTAWA (TNS) — An international legal appeal will be organized for the release of jailed Soviet dissident Anatoly Shcharansky following a round of meetings on Parliament Hill Tuesday.

Irwin Cotler, a Montreal lawyer representing Shcharansky and his wife, Avital, said the international effort will be supplemented by an appendix to an 800-page appeal submitted to the Soviet embassy last summer on the Jewish activist's behalf.

He said the appeal will document seven major violations of Shcharansky's confinement conditions.

Shcharansky, a 31-year-old former leader of the Moscow dissident community, was convicted of spying for the United States and sentenced on July 14, 1978, to serve 13 years at hard labor — three years in prison and 10 in a Siberian labor camp. He has been held virtually incommunicado since then.

Cotler told reporters representations to the United National human rights commission will continue with every effort made to let the Soviets know that "wherever they go they will bump into the Shcharansky case."

Evidence made public after the treason trial indicated Moscow's case was based on a condemnation of activities that supported the Jewish emigration movement's efforts to publicize its position — activities for which dozens of other dissidents have gone unpunished.

Shcharansky's wife, now 28, left the Soviet Union for Israel on an exit visa on July 5, 1974, the day after their wedding, with his assurance that he would soon follow her. He was refused a visa and was arrested shortly afterwards. She has not seen him since.

Did Federal Sales Tax Cut Help?

OTTAWA (CP) — Four months after the federal government reduced its sales tax by three per cent, the opposition and government still can't agree whether the consumer is receiving any oenefit.

Opposition MPs insisted in the Commons again Tuesday that the cut has not yet reached retail stores.

Consumer Affairs Minister Warren Allmand insisted that it has and in saying it, contradicted Deputy Prime Minister Allan MacEachen who said Friday that it hasn't reached consumers yet.

The federal government cut its sales tax to nine per cent from 12 per cent in its November budget and said it would mean a $1 billion saving to consumers.

But because the sales tax is a "hidden tax" — it is tacked on at the factory gate — consumers were advised not to expect any overnight changes.

The government said inventories of goods on store shelves, on which the tax had already been paid, would have to be sold out first.

The government said it would be about three months before the tax cuts reached the retail level.

"All the evidence that we have so far indicates that the tax cuts are being passed on," Allmand told New Democrat Lorne Nystrom of Yorkton-Melville in Saskatchewan in the Commons Tuesday.

On Friday MacEachen had been attacked by opposition members over the sharp rise in the consumer price index in February — to an annual rate of 9.2 per cent — in spite of the tax cuts.

"I agree that the full effect of the reduction in the federal sales tax cut has not yet fully reached the retail level," MacEachen said.

Allmand told a reporter that MacEachen must have been reading outdated memos on the subject.

Opposition members also pointed to the sharp 1.5-per-cent rise in industry selling prices in January, prices that are measured at the factory gate where the sales tax cuts should already have been applied.

Finance Minister Jean Chretien said when he announced the cuts last November that Allmand's department, the anti-inflation board and the Centre for the Study of Inflation and Productivity (CSIP) would help ensure consumers get the benefits of the cuts.

Allmand said the anti-inflation board had written to companies asking them to explain how they would pass on the cuts. His department was watching the stores.

But CSIP, which was to examine the broader economic impact of the cuts, has been abolished by the government.

Allmand said the job is to be passed along to CSIP's successor, the National Commission on Inflation, which has been armed with the power to open company books.

But the commission is not expected to begin its job for several weeks.

Stolen Funds Lost to Union

TORONTO (CP) — The Letter Carriers Union of Canada says it doubts whether it can recover any of the $250,000 believed stolen over a period of more than 10 years by a Toronto union official who committed suicide last month.

George Hayashi, who died in the early hours of Feb. 14 after lying in front of a subway train, was treasurer of the Toronto local for more than 12 years.

Robert Hamilton, the union's national secretary-treasurer, said Tuesday it could take another month to complete an audit of the Toronto local's books.

In an interview from Ottawa, Hamilton said $100,000 was missing during last year alone.

A police investigator said that in one four-month period last year money disappeared at the rate of $10,000 a month.

None of the money taken in 1978 or in previous years has been recovered and Hamilton feels none is likely to show up as it is unknown how it was spent.

The Globe and Mail says sources confirm police statements that there is proof Hayashi was "the responsible source" and that the local treasurer was "making cheques out to himself and making money."

The newspaper says the union has also indicated privately that it will not seek compensation from Hayashi's family because "it's not their fault."

Hayashi, a 58-year-old letter carrier and father of three who spent 25 years with the post office, eluded police for nearly two weeks before his suicide after being reported missing by his wife.

Prior to Hayashi's death, warrants had been issued for his arrest on charges of theft and of uttering forged cheques.

Police said at the time they did not think the man's family had benefited in any way from the stolen funds.

T-Shirt Firing Upheld

OTTAWA (UPC) — The dismissal last May of a postal employee who wore to work a T-shirt enscribed "managment sucks" was upheld by a labor tribunal Tuesday.

The chairman of the Public Service Staff Relations Board tribunal, Michele Falardeau-Ramsey said Juergen Schneider had provoked the dismissal by refusing to remove the offending T-shirt when ordered by postal officials.

When Schneider refused to remove the T-shirt, he was suspended. He returned wearing the same shirt the following day and was removed by Ottawa police.

"Even though the words can be taken to mean 'management is no good,' there is no doubt in my mind that this is a derogatory statement," the chairman said.

However, the tribunal reduced a dismissal for postal worker Robert Burden to a one-year suspension. Burden was the union steward that organized a protest in which workers wore "management sucks" buttons.

Vicious Slurs PM Campaign?

SPRUCE GROVE, Alta. (CP) — Sinclair Stevens delivered a winding attack on Prime Minister Trudeau Tuesday night and then predicted a "vicious personal campaign" against Opposition Leader Joe Clark in the next federal election.

Stevens, Progressive Conservative finance critic, called Trudeau an "emperor" and "confrontation artist" before warning Conservatives to brace themselves for personal attacks on Clark from the Liberals.

"It is a privilege to be talking to this constituency, the riding that will elect the next prime minister whenever the emperor decides" to call an election, Stevens told about 100 party faithful from Clark's Yellowhead riding west of Edmonton.

Stevens also described Trudeau as "a man who is desperate, whose time has run out and doesn't know how to salvage a Liberal government crumbling in Ottawa."

Stevens said Trudeau is "a confrontation artist who needs a shootout at high noon with one or more provincial premiers" to stay in power.

The MP for the Ontario riding of York-Simcoe said Premier Peter Lougheed's energy policy is not a divisive issue in Canada.

"If anyone believes there is some great resentment in Ontario with Alberta owning oil and selling oil, he doesn't know what he is talking about . . . . There is no hatred in Ontario of Alberta."

But he warned the Liberals would attack Clark and Lougheed's energy stand in the next federal election campaign.

"When you have a poor record to run on, an effective way to bury that record is to dodge it with vicious personal attacks."

Answering questions from the audience, Stevens said a Conservative government would not abolish Petro-Canada but would change the function of the federal oil company.

"When it is a state-only operation, it is no longer solely a business consideration but an agent and a policy arm of the government."

Before The Judge

Two of three persons charged with possession of heroin for the purpose of trafficking were denied bail by Judge Fred Green in Victoria provincial court Tuesday.

Remanded in custody until Friday were 24-year-old Janet Christine Stocker, 1557 Oak Bay Avenue, and 30-year-old Jeffrey Michael Burant, 315 Montreal.

They are charged jointly with 25-year-old Geoffrey Charles Weymouth, 1557 Oak Bay Avenue.

Stocker and Weymouth are also jointly charged with possession of heroin for the purpose of trafficking.

A 34-year-old inmate at the William Head federal medium-security penitentiary was given a two-month jail sentence to be served concurrently with a three-year term he is now serving.

Alfred Robert Marion, also known as Allan Robert Manning, pleaded guilty to a 1977 charge brought in from Edmonton of possession of heroin.

Crown counsel Martha McNeeley told the court a search of the residence where Marion was sleeping shortly after midnight Oct. 6, 1977, produced a syringe containing a liquid later analyzed to be heroin on a nearby night table.

A 32-year-old Victoria man was given a two-day jail term, placed on a month's probation and ordered to make restitution for an $8.50 food bill.

Christopher Jerome Tucker, 1405 Fernwood, pleaded guilty to obtaining food by fraud Monday night from the Maple Leaf Restaurant, 1213 Douglas.

Crown counsel Robert Mulligan said Tucker went into the restaurant shortly before 11 p.m., ordered a sirloin steak and liquor and, when presented with the bill, stated two persons seated across from him when he came in were supposed to have paid for his meal before they left.

Green fined a 20-year-old man $75 and ordered him not to enter a Colwood licenced premises during a two-month probation period.

Green also ordered Walker to make restitution for the window.

Green ordered a pre-sentence report for a 19-year-old woman who pleaded guilty to fraud, theft under $200 and two counts of attempted theft.

Andree Marriott Dion, 271 Cadillac, was remanded until April 18 for sentencing by Green.

Mulligan said the charges involved two separate incidents. The first was on Feb. 28 at about 3 p.m. when the woman entered Zellers, 1610 Hillside, took a $31.45 jumper and two pairs of jeans valued at $49.95. About five hours later, Mulligan continued, she went to Sears where she obtained a refund for the jumper outfit. Returning to Zellers, she removed price tags from three pairs of pants valued at $75 but stashed them on another shelf when she thought she was being watched.

On March 6, court was told, she went to Safeways in the Town and Country shopping centre, put several grocery items in a plastic bag and tried to go through the checkout without paying.

Mulligan said Dion was convicted Feb. 8, 1977, in Victoria of theft under $200 and was fined $200 on that occasion.

Traffickers Fined, Jailed

Two men were jailed and a woman was fined by Judge Peter Millward in Victoria county court Tuesday for separate up-Island drug trafficking offences.

Lester Gordon Madison, 22, of Duncan was sentenced to six months in jail for selling $100 worth of cocaine to undercover policemen at a gas station on Nov. 1, 1977.

Timothy Bruce Hodgins, 20, of Duncan was sentenced to 10 days in jail for trafficking close to one ounce of marijuana March 4, 1978.

Millward took into account the lack of a criminal record and an apparent good chance of rehabilitation.

Erica Verena MacPherson, 26, of Campbell River was fined $500 for trafficking four "hits" of MDA for $20 in Duncan Feb. 7, 1978. She has no criminal record.

Millward ruled she must also serve one year's probation, must report monthly to a probation officer and must not leave Vancouver Island without the approval of the probation officer.

Clone May Help Sell Seaweed

Geoff Lindsay, vice-president of Canadian Benthic Ltd., says the research firm concentrated its attention last summer on a West Coast species called gymnogongrus, and found it to be a promising source of carrageenin, a substance much sought after by the food processing and pharmaceutical industries.

By cloning the best examples, biologists believe they can grow a superior plant which will give a maximum yield.

Research has been aided by science grants awarded through the ministry of fisheries and environment and the marine resources branch of the provincial ministry of recreation and conservation.

Prepared Ahead Chili Even Better

cooking with kay

By KAY SPICER

Chili is not only a tasty winter dish, it's also economical. A cook's dream, it's virtually indestructible. There are endless variations of chili and like your basic black it can be gussied up or made plain.

Some people believe chili originated in Mexico and is as old as the Aztec civilization. Others think it was "invented" in Texas.

Chili con carne means "chili with meat" and according to chili experts it should not contain beans. Although it can be made with ground beef, it is even better made with stewing beef, pork or lamb — from budget cuts that tax a cook's ingenuity but save money.

Chili powder is one of the first North American convenience foods. It was developed in Texas in 1890 to give housewives a quick flavoring mixture. Before this women faced the arduous task of grinding and blending their own seasonings. Chili powder results when a combination of chili peppers, cumin, oregano and garlic were blended together.

If chili is not cooked with beans it is usually served with cooked kidney beans on the side or over rice or noodles or with crackers, corn bread or corn chips. Chopped onions and grated cheese are often served as garnishes.

If possible prepare chili one or even two days ahead of serving to allow flavor to develop. Leftover chili can be frozen for those nights when quick dinners are needed.

OLD TIME CHILI
(Makes 8 to 10 servings)

- 2 tablespoons shortening or bacon drippings
- 1½ pounds medium ground beef
- 1½ pounds lean pork shoulder, cut into small cubes
- 2 2 cloves garlic, finely chopped
- 1 medium onion, finely chopped
- 3 tablespoons chili powder
- 1 tablespoon flour
- 1 can (28-ounce) tomatoes
- 2 bay leaves, well crumbled
- 1 teaspoon salt
- 1 teaspoon coriander
- 1 square unsweetened baking chocolate
- 12 ripe olives, sliced

Melt shortening in a large, heavy-bottomed pot. Add beef, pork, garlic and onion. Cook, stirring occasionally, until meat begins to brown and onion is soft. Mix chili powder and flour; stir into meat mixture. Add tomatoes, bay leaves, salt and coriander; mix well.

Simmer over the lowest heat possible for two hours, stirring occasionally to prevent meat from sticking. Add chocolate; stir until it melts and is well blended.

Serve garnished with ripe olive slices.

Timely Tip: To cook in a slow cooker, cook meat, garlic and onion in shortening until meat begins to brown and onion is soft. Transfer to slow cooker.

Add chili powder mixed with flour, tomatoes, bay leaves, salt and coriander; mix well. Cook at LOW for 6 hours. Add chocolate; stir until it melts and is well blended. Serve garnished with ripe olive slices.

QUICK CHILI CON CARNE
(Makes 4 servings)

- 1 tablespoon vegetable oil or shortening
- 1 pound medium ground beef
- 1 teaspoon seasoned salt
- 1 package (1.25 ounce) chile seasoning mix
- ½ cup water
- 1 can (19-ounce) kidney or pinto beans
- 1 can (19-ounce) tomatoes

Heat oil in frying pan. Cook ground beef, stirring to break apart, until it is brown and crumbly. Add seasoned salt, chili seasoning mix; stir to thoroughly combine. Add water, kidney beans and tomatoes; mix thoroughly. Bring to a boil; reduce heat and simmer, uncovered 10 minutes.

Timely Tips: To prevent spattering while frying, invert a colander over frying pan to catch grease and allow steam to escape.

Slick Trick: To help soften and remove the greasy coating on the bottom of frying pans, cover area with paper towel soaked in ammonia to loosen coating. Place pan in plastic bag; seal and leave overnight. Rub off grease with steel wool the next day.

Coaxed to Fat?

It is important to respect the size of a child's appetite. Coaxing a child to eat "just a few bites more" can lead to the serious and often lifelong problem of obesity.

Food & nutrition

Quick and Simple: Fiesta Stew

Prepared in several simple steps, Fiesta Stew is a hearty way to warm the coldest day.

- ¼ pound salted jowl or pork
- ½ pound sliced bacon
- 10 oz. beef broth, or 10 oz. can of consommé
- ⅓ cup dry red kidney beans
- ⅓ dry white beans
- 1 cup diced yellow onions
- 1 cup diced celery
- 1 cup sliced carrots
- 1 cup sliced parsnips
- 1½ cups diced raw potatoes
- 1 teaspoon salt
- ¼ teaspoon ground black pepper
- ½ pound green cabbage, thickly shredded
- 1 large green pepper, cut in chunks
- 2 tablespoons all-purpose flour

The day before making stew, soak beans overnight in cold water. Next day, cook beans in the soaking water until tender. Cut salted pork into thick slices.

In a 4 quart (4 litre) casserole or Dutch oven, gently fry salted pork and bacon. Add broth and equal amount of water to bacon and simmer, covered, for 20-25 minutes. Add onions, celery and carrots. Cook slowly for 10 minutes. Add parsnips, potatoes and seasonings.

Simmer for 10-15 minutes, or until vegetables are almost tender. Add cabbage, green pepper and beans. Simmer until cabbage is soft but slightly crunchy and remaining vegetables are cooked. Thicken with flour if desirable.

Serve piping hot with crusty rolls or thickly sliced bread. Makes 6 servings.

A Peachy Recipe For Yogurt Lovers

Common ¢ents

By KATE MacQUEEN

Since primitive man, milk from cows and goats has played a prominent role in the diet. Food preservation was of major concern then, so cheese, yogurt and buttermilk were produced.

Nowadays, we also have evaporated and powdered milk. The forms of fluid milk are quite varied — whole, partly skimmed, skim and fresh. Milk products also include milk puddings and frozen milk products.

Although the price of fresh milk may be higher in 1979, it's still a nutrition bargain. Sound research has established that milk contributes more to good nutrition than does any other single food.

Milk and its products are the best dietary sources of calcium, riboflavin and Vitamin D and also provide several other B vitamins, Vitamin A and protein.

Food and Drug regulations require the addition of Vitamin D to all milk sold on the retail market and the addition of Vitamin A to skim and partly skimmed milk.

These regulations ensure that the Vitamin A and D content of all milk, whether whole or skim, is comparable.

In addition, Vitamin C is added to all evaporated milk.

If you don't like to drink milk, you can eat it. Use milk in puddings, milkshakes and eggnogs.

Add skim milk powder to baked goods and casseroles.

Double-strength powdered, reconstituted skim milk — or undiluted evaporated milk — adds extra richness to milk desserts, cream soups and sauces while at the same time doubling the calcium content.

FROZEN PEACH YOGURT DESSERT

- 375 ml graham wafer crumbs
- 25 ml sugar
- 50 ml melted butter
- 2 packages (227 g each) cream cheese, softened
- 125 ml light corn syrup
- 500 g peach yogurt
- 2 drops yellow food coloring (optional)
- 1 can (398 ml) peach halves, drained

Combine crumbs, sugar and butter. Press evenly into bottom of 23-cm, springform pan. Chill.

Beat together cream cheese and corn syrup until smooth. Stir in yogurt and food coloring.

Spread yogurt mixture over crust. Freeze 5 to 6 hours. Slice peaches and arrange on top of dessert. Remove from pan and serve. Makes 8 to 10 servings.

At laundry time, do hot water loads before warm water loads. That way, hot water still in the pipe will make a warmer water mix to dissolve the detergent better. Otherwise, what should be a warm water wash turns out to be cold water wash, and for cold water you usually need more detergent.

Try 'Artichoking' High Food Costs

Jerusalem Artichokes have been present in North American soils for more centuries than can be recorded.

It was growing on this continent when the first explorers from Europe arrived. The eastern and plains natives were already making meal from the tubers as well as boiling or roasting them. Perhaps the newcomers decided there was similarity of flavor between the wild tuber and the green plant they already knew in Europe as artichoke.

There is no relationship between the plants botanically, but the tubers were found to be both nourishing and sustaining so were prized mementos to take for food during their long voyage. Some were apparently put into containers of soil as was the custom on sailing ships to preserve them for planting in several European countries.

Later, tubers made their way as food items on journeys to Near Eastern regions where they may have picked up the name Jerusalem Artichoke. The origin of the name is not certain, and this seems as likely as any of the stories.

Home gardeners here have only recently become interested in growing tuberous artichokes, though they are easy enough in good soil.

Perhaps the fact that six tubers are maximum needed for an average family to plant is some kind of restriction — many new gardeners particularly like to put in a 50-foot row of a vegetable, as with potatoes.

However, just now the end of last year's crop is in sight. The half dozen tubers have been replanted for this year's growing and we are finding ways to enjoy the tail end of last year's Jerusalem Artichokes.

If you or your friends have similar conditions, you will enjoy these suggestions.

Scrubbing the tubers well is advised rather than scraping or peeling them for, as with all root vegetables, many nutrients are concentrated immediately beneath the skin.

If desired, some of the thin skin may be removed after boiling or baking when it will come off fairly easily. Keep all liquid remaining after boiling; it gives a delicious flavor to soup, gravy or sauce.

Jerusalem Artichokes do not resemble potatoes in any way. It is known they lack the same form of starch found in the white (or Irish) potato. The vitamin evaluation does not appear in the vegetable listings consulted, but it is believed that the percentage of protein is about equal in potato and Jerusalem Artichoke.

BAKED

Serve with other vegetables or a good cheese sandwich.

PAN COOKED

6 medium size artichokes
1 cup fine-sliced celery stalk
½ cup fine-sliced carrot
1 Tbsp. chopped chives, or parsley
2 Tbsp. soft margarine
4 or 6 whole canned tomatoes.

Scrub, and boil artichokes for 10 minutes until beginning to be tender.

Meanwhile, prepare celery stalk and some of the leaves, slice carrot, chop chives or parsley. Cook these in hot margarine, adding artichokes cut into one-inch pieces.

Stir all together gently until all are fork tender. If more liquid needed, add that from the artichokes. Season with a few grains of salt or kelp powder.

Serve hot with whole tomatoes. These can be heated in same pan for a few minutes, or served cold to prevent further loss of vitamins.

When the Jerusalem Artichokes are freshly dug from garden, the tubers remain crisp and moist for about three days in a cool place. During this period they have a fine flavor and crisp texture suitable for eating raw in a salad.

RAW IN SALAD

Scrub and cut tubers into one-eighth dice to make 2 cups for 4 servings.

2 cups diced artichokes
1 Tbsp. chives finely cut
Green lettuce leaves.

Dressing:

¼ cup soy or other vegetable oil
2 tbsp. fresh lemon juice
2 tsp sugar
¼ tsp. salt.

Shake together in small jar, and pour enough over artichokes and chives to coat all pieces as soon as diced, preventing discoloration and loss of vitamins by air contact.

Other Uses: Tuberous artichokes can take the place of water chestnuts in some Chinese-style home cooked dishes. Their crisp firm texture is similar, and their flavor does not intrude.

Also, sliced a quarter-inch thick with the same thickness of parsnip, at this time of year the two go together beautifully in a soup. Add a couple of tablespoons of lentils or split dry peas; cook all together until fork tender (about 30 minutes). Season gently with paprika and a little curry powder. Serve hot with wholewheat buns and cheese.

This homely North American native plant, so easily grown in a two-foot square of soil, is just one of the solutions to the increasing cost of food in the home.

People in the other age groups and those living alone though a lot younger, should all be encouraged to make their own meals from ingredients bought as fresh as possible; and of the lower cost foods that are full of nutrition yet are usually not thought of when advice is given to these loners.

Too often it is tuna fish or salmon in cans, vegetables out of season such as fresh tomatoes in winter, or the expensive kinds of cheese in place of the fine Canadian mild Cheddar that are recommended — instead of canned whole tomatoes with all their goodness since they were canned at their peak of ripeness, and the use of dried peas, beans, lentils, all of which can be made into nutritious meals for one or for two.

The inclusion of fresh raw fruit and vegetables at least once each day is something to be enjoyed even when the choice is limited as in winter. Those in season or those being featured at a specially low price because of a large purchase by the store — these are bargains to be used by the homemaker to the best advantage.

And the growing of small pots of fresh, green, meal additions on window sill or porch will put the finishing touch of color attraction without the use of highly spiced, bought sauces.

Knowing Onions Makes Fine Soup

Yellow cooking onions are selling at bargain prices these days owing to plentiful supplies. It's a good time of year to use them in hearty and flavorful stews, casseroles, soups and as a main vegetable. Onions can be much more than just a condiment!

One of the greatest ways to enjoy them is in onion soup, cream of onion soup. It uses about 700 grams (1½ pounds) of onions and should satisfy six hungry appetites. Skim milk powder makes the soup smooth and creamy and, above all, economical.

CREAM OF ONION SOUP

1 l sliced onion (about 700 g)
50 ml butter
125 ml boiling water
50 ml flour
10 ml salt
1 ml pepper
2 ml sugar
250 ml skim milk powder
750 ml cold water
15 ml chopped fresh parsley

Saute onion in butter until transparent. Add boiling water, cover and simmer until onion is tender (about 15 min.). Combine flour, seasonings, sugar and skim milk powder. Gradually blend in cold water. Add to onion. Stir and cook until smooth and thick. Add parsley. Makes about 1.2 litres, enough for 6 servings.

Tomatoes d'Amour

The French called them "pomme d'amour," or "love apples." They were believed to have aphrodisiac powers and were as highly prized as a bouquet of roses is today. We know them as tomatoes.

Whether or not the French were right, one thing is certain — "love apples" can be a delicious treat your family will love. Thanks to good supplies from the south, supermarkets across the country are stocking flavorful sun-ripened tomatoes that rival our own summer varieties.

Here's an idea guaranteed to tempt the taste-buds of the "love-apple" of your eye.

Sauteed Tomatoes d'Amour

6 large, firm tomatoes
⅓ cup sour cream
⅓ cup milk
1½ cups bread crumbs
2 tbsp. oil

Cut tomatoes into thick slices. Combine sour cream and milk, blend. Dip tomato slices in liquid, then bread crumbs. Fry in oil over medium-high heat until golden brown. Season with salt and pepper to taste. Top with extra sour cream or grated cheese if desired. Serves 6.

60-MINUTE GOURMET

Basically, It's a Lambburger

By PIERRE FRANEY

NEW YORK — Lamb is one of the best and most delicate of meats and, to our taste, more elegant than steak. Curiously, lamb — outside of chops, the saddle and rack — generally requires a cooking period that would be in excess of an hour. One of the least expensive lamb dishes, on the other hand, is made with ground meat. It is a dish that I have prepared and served in luxury restaurants, and to the great pleasure of many customers.

Basicaly it is a lambburger, but that is not the sort of name one generally includes in dining places. Rather it is generally listed as bitocks d'agneau aux capres. That, it seems, gives it status.

Bitocks is the Russian word for meatballs, and the dish in sum consists of the ground meat with seasonings, bread crumbs, a touch of onion and garlic, all shaped into spheres. The meatballs are browned and served with a dill and sour cream sauce. This sauce, with a few capers added, has nuances of flavor that go extremely well with the flavor of lamb, and the total preparation and cooking time is less than 30 minutes. Or perhaps 45 if you are a little bit less than adept.

GRENADA

(Lamb patties with sour cream and capers.)

1½ pounds ground lamb
1 teaspoon peanut, vegetable or corn oil
1 cup finely chopped onions
1 small clove garlic, finely minced
½ cup fine bread crumbs
1 egg, lightly beaten
2 tablespoons finely chopped parsley
4 tablespoons finely chopped dill
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
2 tablespoons butter
1 teaspoon paprika
¼ teaspoon dried thyme
½ cup dry white wine
½ cup chicken broth
2 cups sour cream
3 tablespoons drained capers

1. Put the meat into a mixing bowl and set aside.

2. Heat the oil in a small skillet and add half the onion and the garlic. Cook until the onion is wilted. Let cool.

3. To the meat add the cooked onion mixture, bread crumbs, egg, parsley, 2 tablespoons chopped dill, salt and pepper to taste.

4. Shape the mixture into balls about two inches in diameter. There should be about 16 balls. Flatten slightly to make patties.

5. Heat two tablespoons butter in one or two skillets large enough to hold the patties. Add the patties to the skillet and cook about five minutes. Turn and cook the patties another five minutes or longer.

6. Transfer the patties to a warm platter and pour of the fat from the skillet. Add the remaning onion and cook, stirring, until wilted. Add the paprika and thyme and stir.

7. Add the wine, stirring. When it boils, add the broth and cook down to about half a cup. Remove from the heat and stir in the sour cream. Add salt and pepper to taste. Return to the heat and heat gently without boiling. For a more refined sauce, put the mixture through a sieve.

8. Reheat, stirring, and add the capers.

9. Pour the sauce over the lamb patties and serve sprinkled with remaining dill. Serve with boiled noodles.

Broiled Chicken With Mustard Crumbs

A dish that's sure to titilate even the most jaded palate is this version of devilled chicken.

1 three-pound chicken, cut into quarters
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
3 tablespoons peanut, vegetable or corn oil
2 tablespoons imported mustard such as Dijon or Dusseldorf.
2 tablespoons dry white wine
4 to 6 tablespoons fine, fresh bread crumbs.

Preheat broiler to high. Sprinkle chicken with salt and pepper. Brush the chicken on all sides with oil.

Arrange the chicken pieces, skin side down, on a baking tray or dish. Place the chicken under the broiler about three or four inches from the source of heat. Broil about five minutes and turn the pieces. Broil five minutes on the second side and remove.

Blend the mustard and wine. Place the chicken pieces skin side down. Brush the pieces on top with half the mustard mixture. Sprinkle the chicken with half the bread crumbs using equal amounts for each piece. Return to the broiler and broil about one minute, or until richly browned. Do not let the crumbs burn. Turn the pieces. Brush with the remaining mustard mixture and sprinkle with remaining crumbs. Return to the broiler and let broil about one minute or until richly browned on the second side. Immediately turn the oven heat to 350 degree F. Place the chicken in the oven and bake 10 minutes or until done.

Yield: 4 servings.

Iran Oil Squeeze Hurts Fibre Firm

MILAN, Italy (CP) — Sales of man-made fibres recently were halted by two major Italian manufacturers following an upsurge in raw material costs sparked by the cutoff of Iranian oil.

Giancarlo Regaloiz, manager of [illegible] said, "If we increase prices to cover the new costs, we could discourage industrial users who might switch once again to natural fibres."

Gold Content Misrepresented

BOSTON (CP) — A number of foreign manufacturers have been misrepresenting the gold content in fine jewelry, often passing off base metals as fine gold, says the Manufacturing Jewellers and Silversmiths of America, Inc. The association says the bulk of the jewelry is from Italy.

dear abby

DEAR ABBY: My mother lives in another town. She keeps asking me to visit her, but it's such a drag I seldom go, so she comes to visit me.

I am 28, female and married. For years I avoided visiting mother because her sister lives in the same town and I always had to go to see her, too. The minute I walked through my aunt's door she would "weigh" me with her eyes, then start in on me about how I should lose some weight. Now my mother has started to do the same thing.

Abby, I have tried every diet there is and none has worked. So I've decided to accept myself as I am, and as long as my husband is satisfied, to heck with everyone else!

When mother left, she asked when I was coming to visit her, so I wrote her a letter (which I haven't mailed yet) and told her that I would visit her after I shed 50 pounds.

Am I being overly sensitive and unable to accept criticism, or am I justified in my feelings of irritation?

HEAVY PROBLEM

DEAR HEAVY: Yours is a heavier problem than shedding 50 pounds. It's shedding the role of a little girl who desperately needs mama's approval.

I'm sure your mother means well, but she must be told that you are now an adult in charge of your own life, and until she quits treating you as a child, you will not visit her.

DEAR ABBY: Karen is my best friend. We are both 15. Karen spends a lot of time at my house. When my father is home, he has a habit of kissing Karen on the lips whenever she arrives and goes home. Do you consider this proper behavior for a 38-year-old man?

Also, my father is always trying to get Karen to sit on his lap. Sometimes she does and sometimes she doesn't. I don't know if this is embarrassing to Karen or not. As a daughter it doesn't bother me, but I sure wouldn't want Karen's father kissing me on the lips or asking me to come sit on his lap.

What is your opinion?

DADDY'S DAUGHTER

DEAR DAUGHTER: I think Karen is a little too OLD to be kissed on the lips by your father. And your father is too YOUNG to have a 15-year-old girl on his lap.

DEAR ABBY: About artificial insemination: When a man's sperm count is low and he wants to father a child, why not ask the sperm bank to combine his sperm with the sperm of an anonymous donor? Then when pregnancy occurs from the mixed sperm insemination, there is always the possibility that one of his sperm made it after all!

CHUKMAH

DEAR CHUK: Why not, indeed? My insemination experts tell me that technique has been used often.

Teachers To Study Dropouts

TORONTO (CP) — An Ontario teachers' group plans to spend $100,000 to find out why two-thirds of the students enrolled in the four-year general high school program drop out.

Peter Norman, chairman of the Ontario Secondary School Teachers' Federation research committee, said the federation will spend $100,000 in the next two years to study why the dropout rate is so high and what should be done to keep the students in school.

He said the first phase of the study will ask dropouts from 10 schools and their current employers to evaluate the school system.

Norman said the federation started its studies when it became clear there was a shortage of skilled persons in Canada.

The studies may show that high schools should provide more technical training so students can obtain specific skills.

About 30 per cent of high school students enrol in the four-year program to prepare for community college. Sixty per cent are enrolled in the advanced stream which leads to university and 10 per cent are in special education classes for students with learning problems.

Boycotts Being Organized By Group Called WARP

BRAMPTON, Ont. (CP) — Women Against Rising Prices, a group of 10 women who in February started organizing boycotts of selected supermarket foods, want consumers to avoid buying all meat priced at more than $1.75 a pound this week.

The group, set up Feb. 15 in response to rising food prices, asks consumers to boycott eight products each week in the hope supermarkets will reduce the prices of the products.

Marie Seckler, a group member and a consumer education teacher at Sheridan College in this city, said today that besides the meats, her group wants consumer to boycott the following items for a week starting Wednesday — all frozen and refrigerated desserts, frozen fish, imported cheese, fabric softeners, potato chips, soups and cabbages.

Try to Camouflage the Vitiligo

By L. L. Coleman, MD

My daughter was born with a patch of vitiligo on her face. She is now getting to the point of being self-conscious about it. I've been looking everywhere for any new ideas on how to cure this problem. — Mrs. F.V.

DEAR MRS. V.: Vitiligo is a strange congenital condition in which there is a loss of pigment, creating white patches on some portions of the skin. People who have this condition are very prone to sunburn, even with slight exposure to the sun.

The cause is unknown. Sometimes it is associated with some underlying condition which must be ruled out. When the patches of depigmentation occur on the face it is, of course, more distressing because the condition is more apparent.

Unfortunately, there is no known method by which the pigmentation can be restored. Consequently, efforts are made to camouflage the areas with cosmetic creams. There are a number of drugs which, when applied to the skin surface, can prevent severe sunburn. But the drugs that are now available are totally ineffective in re-establishing the pigmentation of the skin.

I'm not particularly bothered by my menstrual period as so many other women are. But frequently I have pain in the abdomen between my periods. The pain is sometimes very severe, then it disappears after a few days. — Miss E.M.

DEAR MISS M.: You accurately describe a common condition known as mittelschmerz. This is a German word for middle pain.

This type of lower abdominal pain frequently occurs between menstrual periods, which is the time of ovulation. Ovulation is the time that the ovum, or egg, comes through the outer layer of the ovary and sometimes produces the pain you mention.

Doctors are careful to make this diagnosis because so often the pain may mistakenly be considered an attack of appendicitis.

I get tiny, painful ulcers of the mouth. They hurt like the devil. What can be done about them? — Mr. G.Y.

DEAR MR. Y.: Many explanations have been offered for the recurrence of these canker sores, or aphthous ulcers, of the mouth. None are completely satisfactory. Poor dental hygiene, excessive fatigue, emotional stress, tobacco and alcohol have all been accused.

Application of anesthetic medicines are temporarily helpful. Drugs such as lactinex and bacid are also thought to be beneficial. A grandmother's remedy: Rinse the mouth with lemon juice and table salt. Try it . . . . it just might work.

I've had a bad attack of flu. I wonder if I will now have immunity against another attack. I am prone to these, and sometimes I even have an attack up until late spring.—Mrs. E.F.

DEAR MR. F.:

There are so many different viruses responsible for influenza and influenza-like illnesses that one infection can rarely produce immunity to others. This, in fact, is the reason why so many people are disappointed when they develop colds and grippes even though they have had a flu shot in the late fall.

Another thing must be considered. Many types of ordinary cold are frequently lumped into the category of flu. The symptoms can be so similar that only a laboratory test can make the distinction.

Many people are tempted to let down their "winter precautions" during the spring. It should be remembered that viruses do not attack according to seasons. A sensible diet, moderation of tobacco and alcohol, sufficient rest, adequately warm clothing, avoidance of excess fatigue and overexposure to drafts, cold and dampness all play an important role in reducing the frequency and severity of these infections.

TV Ads Should Push Healthy Snacks

MONTREAL (CP) — A McGill University management professor, who has studied children's preferences for sugar-laden snack foods after watching advertisements for candy and sugar cereals, says more healthy snacks should be advertised on television.

Marvin Goldberg says a study he recently carried out with California first graders showed that when the children were offered a choice between highly sugared and more wholesome snack and breakfast foods, their choices reflected the kinds of commercials they had seen.

Those who viewed commercials for highly sugared foods said they would like to eat sugar cereals, candy bars and jelly beans — including brands they had not seen advertised as well as specific brands they had seen. On the other hand, children who had seen public service announcements chose more fruit, vegetables and juice.

Goldberg, who also acts as a consultant to the Quebec government's advertising campaign to encourage Quebecers to follow a healthier lifestyle, plans to follow up the California study this summer with another research project at a children's camp.

Particles Offer Hope to Bomb Squads

By WALTER PINCUS

WASHINGTON (WP) — It's sometime in the future: terrorists have blown up a government building. In the rubble, an investigator searching with an ultraviolet light finds tiny particles that glow under its beam.

Using a magnet, he scoops up the fluorescing particles. Later they are analyzed and reported to Washington where there color-coded cores reveal the type of explosive involved, its manufacturer and the date and work shift on which it was made.

With this information, the explosive can be traced to retailers and, perhaps, to the person or persons who bought it.

This is the picture Treasury Department officials paint of identification "taggants," the bureaucratic name for new, scientifically designed, inert particles made up of a seven-layered colored core, iron powder and outer layer of fluorescers that would respond to ultraviolet light.

These tiny identification taggants would be added to explosives — making up less than one-one-thousandth of their volume. Although up to 90 per cent of them would probably be destroyed in a detonation, those that remained could, when recovered and examined under a microscope, retain their color code and thus reveal their source.

After five years of research and testing, Treasury Department officials consider identification taggants technologically ready for inclusion in most commercially manufactured explosives.

A second, more exotic taggant — to aid detection before detonation — is still in development, though there are hopes it will be ready by late 1980.

Scientists are attempting to put a special inert vapor inside a tiny plastic capsule, smaller than the eye of a sewing needle. The vapor would seep through the capsule membrane to be detected by special equipment much like that already at airports.

The idea is to help locate explosives before they are set off, particularly at airports and buildings targeted by terrorists.

For two years the Treasury Department and other government agencies have been pushing for legislation to require that all explosives manufactured in the United States contain taggants. The latest version of the proposal is now before the House and Senate in an omnibus anti-terrorist bill.

Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Richard J. Davis recently said the program "will provide us with significant tools in the battle against terrorists and others who use explosives illegally."

Surprisingly, opposition has developed, from the National Rifle Association (NRA). Last year that group complained because taggants were going to be added to gun powder used in muzzle-loaded guns and some home-loaded ammunition.

It was argued the taggants had not been fully tested for safety and could harm both sportsmen's gun barrels and the trajectory of their bullets.

Behind the objections, however, was NRA's fear that tagging explosive powders was a first step to federal gun control legislation.

A bill to authorize taggants but not in black and smokeless powders has been introduced this year by NRA supporters in Congress. Treasury opposes it because these powders are popular with terrorist bombers — making up 20 per cent of the criminal explosions.

The arrest rate for criminal bombings is among the lowest — 8 per cent — of any crime category. One major block to investigators is that they often cannot determine what type of explosive caused the blast, and even when they can there is no way to narrow its source.

The explosive taggant program was born more than five years ago when a panel of government investigative agencies decided to turn to scientists for help.

The Aerospace Corp., under contract to Treasury's Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, has acted as project co-ordinator.

Under its guidance an extensive research and testing program has been carried out by industrial giants.

Nazi Debate Splits West Germany

BONN (Reuter) — An emotional debate on whether undetected Nazi war criminals should be allowed to live without fear of prosecution after this year is cutting right across party lines in West Germany.

The Bundestag (lower house of parliament) will decide before the summer recess whether to abolish a 30-year statute of limitation for murder which goes into effect on Dec. 31.

The statute, already once extended by 10 years to allow the continued prosecution of war criminals, would prevent justice authorities from opening new investigations into murders committed more than 30 years ago. It would not affect cases where investigations already have been started.

After months of intense discussion and appeals from the United States, Israel and Poland to lift the statute, the Social Democrat government of Chancellor Helmut Schmidt appears set to win a narrow majority in the Bundestag for its repeal.

It needs a simple majority of the 496 Bundestag deputies to annul the statute.

An overwhelming majority of the 214 Social Democrats in parliament and a small number of liberal Free Democrats pledged last week to support its abolishment, saying West Germany had a moral obligation to continue prosecuting Nazis.

Most Free Democrats oppose any change in the law, arguing that parliament should not be allowed to alter existing legislation because it is politically expedient.

But the government parties can count on some support from the conservative Christian Democratic Union (CDU). Of the 190 CDU deputies, 27 so far have said they will support abolition.

On the other hand, all 53 deputies of the right-wing Bavarian Social Union led by Franz Josef Strauss oppose repeal.

A small group of Social Democrats and liberals, supported by Werner Maihofer, a law professor and former interior minister, have put forward a proposal to separate prosecution of Nazi crimes from that of other murders.

The proposal is viewed with skepticism by politicians and jurists, who say it would contravene the principle of equality before the law.

No one can say how many Nazis might surface from hideouts abroad or reveal their true identity at home if the statute goes into effect, but Nazi-hunter Simon Wiesenthal said recently there would be hundreds. He has brought 1,100 Nazis before courts.

Wiesenthal said he had received 30,000 letters and telephone calls from West Germany about suspected war criminals after last month's screening here of the U.S.-produced television series Holocaust. Many people said they had a Nazi living next door under a false name.

A public-opinion poll in West Germany showed that after Holocaust, which describes the fate of a Jewish family under the Nazis, many more Germans now favor scrapping the statute.

Wiesenthal said it was important to continue bringing former Nazis to court, regardless of whether they will be sentenced or not.

"The main thing is to maintain people's awareness of the past," he said.

The head of Israel's documentatim centre for Nazi crimes, Tuwiha Friedmann, said last month that Israel did not seek revenge.

"All we ask is that these murderers keep their mouth shut until they die," he said.

Many former Nazis are known to be hiding in Latin America and it is feared that under the statute they might return, boasting of their crimes, and even become politically active again.

Official figures show that at least 10,000 Nazis participated in the extermination of Jews. Six million Jews were killed.

West Germany's Central Institute for the Prosecution of Nazi Crimes, in Ludwigsburg, is investigating about 200 cases involving 3,708 people, and there are 11 Nazi trials now running in West Germany.

The head of the Ludwigsburg institute, state prosecutor Adalbert Rueckerl, said trials of Nazis would continue well into the next century, but added that in many cases theremight not be a conviction because of a lack of evidence.

He said Polish authorities were sending documents every day and were estimated to have material on 2,000 new cases.

The average length of legal investigations and trials of former Nazis in West German courts has risen to 16 years in 1978, from 3.6 years in 1962.

Up to January last year, West German courts had sentenced 6,432 people for Nazi crimes, most for minor offences. Only 500 were found guilty of murder or complicity to murder.

In addition, courts of the Western allies — the United States, Britain and France — have sentenced an additional 5,000 Germans for war crimes.

Comparative figures show that up to 1978, courts in Communist East Germany sentenced 12,000 former Nazis. About 24,000 Germans were sentenced by Russian courts, 16,000 by Poland, 13,000 by Austria and 1,000 by France.

'Large Cobweb' To Test Channel

LOS ANGELES (AP) — It won't be one small step for man if the Gossamer Albatross — compared by its designer with "an extremely large cobweb" — succeeds in crossing the English Channel.

It will take a lot of steps by a strong-legged pilot. The Albatross is powered by a cyclist peddalling in the cockpit.

The Albatross was designed by the team that won a British industrialist's $87,500 prize for building the first working man-powered aircraft.

Designer Dr. Paul MacCready says it will travel about 17 kilometres an hour at an altitude of 10 metres and will take about two hours to wing the 33 kilometres from Dover, England to Cape Gris Nez, France.

If it's the first muscle-powered aircraft to do so, MacCready gets a prize of £100,000 (about $240,000) from aeronautics buff Henry Kremer.

"It's like an extremely large cobweb slowly floating through air," he said Monday. "Sometimes as we watch it fly we find the shadow on the ground looks more substantial than the aircraft."

MacCready, Allen and their co-workers will take the Albatross to Britain in early May, and probably will not attempt to cross the channel until August.

'Harmless' Drug Takes a Terrible Toll

By WILLIAM CHAPMAN

TOKYO (WP) — The first symptom is usually a peculiar hardening and heaviness in the victim's feet and ankles, as if they were tightly encased in some thick rubber substance. The toes seem stuck together and immovable, the feet feel as though they were strapped into very tight shoes.

Later, there are grotesque deformities of hands and legs, accompanied by severe pains. It becomes impossible to walk. Speech becomes difficult and eyesight begins to weaken ending for many in blindness.

They are the crippling results of Japan's most dreaded disease, Smon, a nervous disorder that affected thousands here until a household drug believed to be the cause was taken off the market. It is by far Japan's worst drug-caused tragedy and by some estimates may be the world's biggest drug-induced crippler.

More than 11,000 Japanese have been damaged by it in the past two decades and years of litigation against drug companies and the government in 25 courts have produced record-breaking court-awarded damages exceeding $100 million.

It also has evoked criticism of the government's drug-evaluating system, of the prescription habits of Japanese doctors, and of the companies which sold the damaging drug as a harmless household remedy for diarrhea.

Smon (subacute myelo-optico-neuropathy) outbreaks in several communities occurred as early as the 1950s. Since then, hundreds of victims have been hospitalized or confined to wheelchairs and thousands more crippled so badly they cannot work. One of 20 has gone totally blind.

The cause has been identified by medical researchers as clioquinol, a substance used in anti-diarrhea medicines all over the world for decades and said to be still widely prescribed in undeveloped countries where drug regulations are weak. A growing number of Japanese judges have accepted the investigators' finding and labelled clioquinol as the cause of Smon. Two drug companies and the Japanese government have, in effect, accepted that finding and offered to settle out of court while a third drug company that marketed eliquinol insists Smon is caused by a virus.

A major remaining question baffles the experts: why Japan? Clioquinol has been marketed in several forms throughout the world since 1899. Small numbers of Smon cases have been verified in France, West Germany, Holland and Sweden. No other country has yet reported Smon on so large a scale as in Japan.

Some authorities have speculated about racial factors peculiar to the Japanese. For a time, drug companies contended that since Smon did not spread in other countries clioquinol could not be blamed. But courts are now pinning the blame on the heavy dosages prescribed by Japanese doctors.

According to the opinion of the Tokyo district court "... the large scale outbreaks of Smon in Japan can be concluded to be due to the wide use of larger daily doses and longer periods of administration in Japan than in foreign countries."

"In Japan, doctors used it as an anti-diarrhea medicine and prescribed large doses of it for long periods of time," said one attorney who has represented victims. "But in other countries it was not prescribed by doctors. It was only sold in shops and kept around the house and lots of it was thrown out periodically."

In Japan, physicians are permitted to sell drugs directly to patients of their own prescription. The more drugs they prescribe, the more money they make.

Spectacular shot of Jupiter

Jupiter Some Ways Like Earth

By THOMAS O'TOOLE

WASHINGTON (WP) — Despite its massive size and rapid rotation, despite stunning peculiarities like its stripes and bands and Great Red Spot, despite the fact that it's mostly ammonia without oceans or continents to influence it from below, the atmosphere of Jupiter behaves a lot like Earth's.

White cirrhus clouds swirl at the highest altitudes, parts of its skies are blue and lightning flickers above the thunderclouds. Most of the air currents in the northern hemisphere blow toward the east and in the southern hemisphere toward the west, just like they do on Earth.

Jet streams cross the planet at hundreds of miles an hour, giant thunderstorms pop suddenly into view along the equator. Regions of dry air appear at the same latitudes one would find Africa's Sahara and Australia's Great Sandy Desert.

"I think a lot of sound atmospheric concepts are going to emerge from studying Jupiter," said the California Institute of Technology's Dr. Andrew Ingersoll, a meteorologist analyzing Jupiter photographs taken by the Voyager spacecraft that flew by the planet March 5. "There are surprising similarities between the Earth and Jupiter."

One of the most striking similarities is the abundance of jet streams in the upper atmosphere, clearly the source of much of the changing weather on both planets.

There are as many as 20 jet steams circling Jupiter at speeds up to 350 miles an hour, piling air up in certain places and pulling it out of others. Scientists suspect that Jupiter's jet streams are at least one reason for the enormous white-colored ovals seen in the photographs of the planet. The ovals may be little more than gigantic high pressure systems that march around the planet and produce weather.

Just south of the Great Red Spot lies one of the largest white ovals on Jupiter, still trapped between two jets streams moving in opposite directions ever since it was first spotted by telescopes on Earth in 1939. To the west of the oval appears to be a "wake," left there by the motion of the faster-moving west winds as they blow by.

Scientists suspect that one reason the ovals have the shape they do is that the jet streams trapping them above the clouds have different speeds, forcing the gas at the outer edge of the oval to follow a circular direction. One oval lies below a jet stream going west at 120 miles an hour and above an easterly jet moving at 100 miles an hour.

The biggest oval of all is the Great Red Spot, three times the size of the Earth and trapped in its same southerly latitude for at least 300 years. Whatever lies just west of the red spot is enormous, looking like huge bundles of cooked spaghetti. It could be a wake. It could be air that's trying to move east and is blocked by the red spot.

"On the west side of all high pressure systems on Earth is a blocked low pressure system," said Dr. Garry Hunt, University College of London Meteorologist who is also analyzing Voyager photographs. "Why is that interesting? Because it relates to my droughts in Europe and your very peculiar weather over here."

Scientists had thought the red spot was a permanent hurricane drawing energy from deep inside the planet to the tops of the clouds, where it spreads out like a huge eye that measures 13,000 miles from top to bottom.

There are no signs of spreading. A movie sequence taken by Voyager as it approached Jupiter shows a large white blob moving around the red spot and making a full revolution of the red spot every six days. The blob didn't change shape, it didn't change direction and it didn't slow down.

"It just went round and round," Cal Tech's Dr. Ingersoll said. "If there were any spreading at the top of the red spot the blob would have moved away from the red spot."

The red spot may not be a hurricane at all but instead may be a passive storm, like a giant eddy of air driven by the temperature differences of the jet streams above and below it.

Much smaller eddies of air are formed on Earth when jet streams wander off the straight and narrow. Similar eddies are formed in the Earth's oceans when warm water currents like the Gulf Stream suddenly veer off course and run into a mass of cold water.

"What we see in the photographs is meteorological in origin," London's Dr. Garry Hunt said. "It means we don't have to invoke mountains on Jupiter to explain the red spot's existence."

Ghana Money Switch A Killer

ACCRA (Reuter) — Four persons have died and 22 have been arrested during Ghana's switch to new currency notes, the Ghana News Agency (GNA) reported today.

Ghanaians have until Monday to change their old banknotes, called cēdis, for new ones, a move designed to frustrate illegal holding of the currency outside Ghana and to reduce excess cash in the economy.

GNA quoted police as saying a man was shot and killed by a soldier outside Barclays Bank in Accra, while three persons died of exhaustion waiting in lines outside banks in various parts of the country.

Army commander Maj.-Gen. N. A. Odartey-Wellington ordered the arrest of the second deputy managing director of the Commercial Bank of Ghana, William Osei, on a charge of frustrating the currency change, the agency said.

The agency quoted police as saying the manager of the Commercial Bank's University branch also has been arrested, as have two bank managers in the Ashanti region. GNA said this brings to 22 the number of people arrested so far in connection with the change-over.

The government has commandeered several vans to collect old banknotes from outlying areas where people feared they would not be able to reach banks before next Monday's deadline, the agency said.

GNA quoted a spokesman for the Bank of Ghana as saying more than three million new cedis (about $1.8 million) have so far been paid out to the public.

Big Scandal Scented In Peanut Probe

WASHINGTON (Reuter) — Republicans say they are not satisfied with the appointment of a special counsel to investigate alleged irregularities in President Jimmy Carter's family peanut business and have warned it might lead to a major scandal.

On Tuesday, Attorney-General Griffin Bell named Paul Curran, a New York lawyer active in Republican politics, to head an investigation started by the justice department and the FBI.

But Republicans, who had earlier demanded a Watergate-style special prosecutor — a lawyer functioning independently from the justice department — to take charge of the investigation, said the department did not go far enough.

"The parallel with Watergate is inescapable," said Senate Republican leader Howard Baker of Tennessee after nearly all 41 Republicans in the 100-seat Senate demanded at a special meeting that Bell name a special prosecutor.

Baker said that Curran is qualified but lacks the powers of a special prosecutor.

"He is a good man, but for the wrong job," Baker said.

However, Senator Edward Kennedy (Dem. Mass.), chairman of the Senate judiciary committee, praised Bell and said the appointment "should dispell any possible concern by the public that the investigation will be conducted fairly and objectively."

Curran's powers as special counsel to the justice department falls short of the broader authority given to the Watergate special prosecutors who investigated the political scandals which eventually forced President Nixon to resign.

Unlike a special prosecutor, Curran must get justice department approval to take a case to court.

Republicans complained that the special counsel has limited authority, mainly because he is not independent from the justice department and might be fired from his job.

Curran, 46, a former federal prosecutor in New York, told reporters: "I am going to call the shots as best I see them. I am going to finish it as quickly as I can."

White House spokesman Jody Powell said President Carter is confident the investigation will prove that there was no criminal act or wrongdoing on his part.

There has been no formal accusation of any wrongdoing on the part of the Carters.

Records from the family peanut warehouse in Plains, Ga., have been subpoenaed in the justice department's investigation of the financial activities of Bert Lance, a close friend of President Carter and his one-time budget director.

The investigation has also in part focused on a $7-million line of credit extended to the Carter business by the National Bank of Georgia when Lance was the bank's president in 1975 and 1976.

FBI agents are reported to have discovered evidence of technical violations of banking laws involving the handling of the peanuts used as collateral for the loans.

The president has a 63-per-cent share in the warehouse. His brother Billy, currently undergoing hospital treatment for alcohol abuse, owns 15 per cent. Their mother, Lillian Carter, owns the remaining 22 per cent.

2nd Governor-General's Award for Alice Munro

OTTAWA (CP) — Alice Munro, of Clinton, Ont., is to receive her second Governor-General's literary award from a second Governor-General.

Mrs. Munro won her first award in 1968 for Dance of the Happy Shades and received her award from Roland Michener. When she receives her second award April 4, for Who Do You Think You Are?, she will take it from the hand of Edward Schreyer.

Other awards, announced Tuesday by the Canada Council, go to Roger Caron, for Go Boy; Patrick Lane for Poems New and Selected; Francois-Marc Gagnon for Paul-Emile Borduas; Jacques Poulin for Les grandes marees; and Gilbert Langevin for Mon refuge est un volcan.

A council statement said that Caron's Go Boy, published by McGraw-Hill-Ryerson and in its second printing, is an autobiographical account of the 23 years he spent in federal prisons for bank robbery and escaping custody.

Lane, described by the council as poet in residence at the University of Manitoba, has 10 volumes of poetry behind him and his Poems New and Selected contains work published in some of them.

Como Just Keeps Crooning Along

Scott's World

By VERNON SCOTT
United Press International

HOLLYWOOD — Perry Como cut his first song for RCA Records, Goodbye, Sue, — an old 78-rpm single 35 years ago — and just signed a 10-year extension with the company, thereby establishing a longevity landmark.

"I'll soon be 66 years old," he said. "When I signed the extension, I said, 'You must be crazy. I'll be in a wheelchair 10 years from now."

Hardly. Three years ago, long after such revered contemporaries as Bing Crosby and Frank Sinatra were more or less considered back numbers, Como turned up with two gold records for It's Impossible and And I Love You So."

In addition to several recording sessions a year, Como stars in a brace of television specials every Christmas and Easter, which was the reason for his current visit to Hollywood.

He only discovered the thrill of live audiences five years ago when he performed in England and Scotland. The warm response convinced him he'd been missing the real delights of show business.

"It was great," he said. "When I opened in London's Palladium, it was 10 minutes before I could sing the first note. The audience just kept cheering. They shouted, asking me why I hadn't been there before. I told 'em that I hadn't been invited.

"When I finished my songs, they called out for me to chat with them. So I brought a chair on stage and sat and talked, answering questions. I've never seen anything like it. They treat you as a friend, not an entertainer.

"What amazes is me is the number of young people who show up — I mean from 18 to 30 years old. I thought I'd be like Lawrence Welk out there playing to a sea of grey hair. People would have to be older than 40 to remember who I was. It's a kick seeing so many young ones."

Perry will expand his horizons next month by jetting to Japan to play six concerts in 10 days. Next year he hopes to return to Europe.

Like fine Italian wine, Como improves with age. He says he still has the same vocal range he had 40 years ago. But he does nothing to keep his voice in condition. No exercises, no rehearsals.

"I don't use my pipes all that much," he said. "I've always believed you only have so many songs in you. Maybe that sounds dumb. But there comes a time when the pipes wear out. So I don't overdo it.

"My daughter once complained, 'Daddy, for a man who makes his living singing, I never hear you sing.' And I told her, 'That's because you don't pay too well.'

"When I'm due for a recording session, even after three months without singing, I show up at the studio, have a cup of coffee and go right in and sing without any warmups or big preparation."

Como clearly does not work out of economic necessity. Many times a millionaire, he remembers his early days as a barber.

"I was making $150 a week when I left the barber business," he said. "That was a lot of money 45-50 years ago."

Along the way Como won seven Emmy awards for his TV shows and 17 gold records.

"I've been lucky," he said. "All those years on radio and television — I guess it was more than 20 years all together — made me a member of a lot of families. Maybe that's why people tune in my TV show just to say hello again."

26.4% Profit Rise Fires U.S. Inflation Debate

WASHINGTON (AP) — A U.S. government report that business profits increased by 26.4 per cent last year is heating an already fiery debate over the effectiveness of the country's efforts to stem inflation.

"We will take steps to deal with it," said President Jimmy Carter's principal assistant, Hamilton Jordan.

However, Jack Carlson, an economist with the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, said: "Profits data cannot be used as a scapegoat for bad government policies that are causing inflation."

The focus of the debate is the commerce department's Tuesday announcement that before-tax profits during the last quarter of 1978 were at an annual rate of $225.3 billion, a gain of $19.9 billion over the third quarter and $47 billion or 26.4 per cent over the final three months of 1977.

After-tax profits rose $26.3 billion against the previous fourth quarter, an increase of 25.2 per cent

The increase in both before-tax and after-tax profits was the largest since 1950.

The announcement came as the Carter administration is working hard to persuade labor to continue to comply with its voluntary guidelines calling for a limit of seven per cent on wage increases despite the current double-figure inflation rate.

Alfred Kahn, the president's chief inflation fighter, said in a statement: "At a time when we are asking all segments of society to exercise restraint, and have seen a real demonstration of restraint by labor, the large increase announced ... puts business on trial in the eyes of the American people."

Presidential aide Jordan told a gathering at the National Press Club: "We think profits are inordinately high." He promised the administration would "deal with it" but did not explain how.

The Chamber of Commerce argued in response that government, not business, is to blame for the economy's woes.

Carlson said in a statement: "The acceleration in inflation has been, and continues to be, federal budgets too high for economic conditions, tardy monetary policy which was adding to inflation last year instead of fighting it, and federal government cost-push inflationary policies, such as increases in the federal minimum wage, social security taxes and costly regulations."

An analysis by New York's Citibank said real corporate earnings grew about eight per cent after taking inflation and taxes into account. But the analysis said 1978 still was "a banner year for stockholders, corporate treasurers and ... tax collectors."

Landing Rights Discussed

NEW YORK (CP)— External Affairs Minister Don Jamieson conferred with British Foreign Secretary David Owen on Tuesday, seeking a possible solution to the Air Canada landing-rights problem in Britain.

"I had some discussions with Secretary Owen on the matter of Heathrow and Gatwick and the air rights issue, but nothing substantive so far," Jamieson told a reporter.

He said he plans to talk the matter over with Owen in more detail later.

Britain wants Air Canada to move its operations from London's congested Heathrow Airport. The switch would see Air Canada landing at Gatwick, a single-runway airport some 40 kilometres south of London.

$7 Million Hash Grab Made in Pakistan

KARACHI, Pakistan (Reuter) — About 96 kilograms of hashish oil worth $7 million has been impounded by Karachi police following the arrest of an airline steward and the owner of a medical store, police said today.

Police alleged the steward, employed by Pakistan International Airlines, and his partner have for two years been smuggling hashish to New York and Amsterdam, helped by accomplices among the airline's ground engineering staff.

Viets Celebrating at Post-War Rallies

HONG KONG (Reuter) — Vietnamese are celebrating at post-war rallies although some Chinese troops still remain on Vietnam's side of the border, the Vietnam News Agency said today.

The agency said that Tran Vy, chairman of the Hanoi People's Committee, told a rally attended by a crowd of 30,000 in the Vietnamese capital on Tuesday: "They (the Chinese) are still stationing their troops in many border areas on Vietnamese territory and threatening to continue new military adventures to annex Vietnam."

Both sides have agreed on Hanoi as the site for negotiations after their month-long border conflict, but not on the date.

In the port of Haiphong, more than 40,000 Vietnamese attended a rally, while nearly 10,000 more turned up for a meeting in the provincial capital of Pleiku.

The agency also reported the release of two newsreel films on what is called "the Vietnamese people's victorious fight against the Chinese aggressors" in Cao Bang, Lang Son and Hoang Lien Son provinces.

Ethiopia Solidly In Russian Camp

By DAVID OTTAWAY

ADDIS ABABA (WP) — Once the staunchest ally of the United States in Black Africa, Ethiopia today is playing the same role with just as much zeal for the Soviet Union and Cuba. Its new military leader, Lt. Col. Mengistu Haile Mariam, seems to have set his eyes on becoming the Fidel Castro of this continent.

The change in friends and alliances this country has undergone in the past few years is staggering, and has left many Ethiopians visibly uneasy and bewildered.

Strange anomalies still abound in the new Marxist, revolutionary Ethiopia so that stern-faced Soviet officers staying at the Addis Ababa Hilton hear the American Forces Network, the Voice of America or the BBC morning news on the hotel radio. Outside in the streets, hawkers wave at them the latest issue of Newsweek recounting "China's Vietnam Gamble" and the latest news from the United States.

Only two years ago, Ethiopia was still linked tightly by a handful of 24-year-old treaties to Washington, buying American-made F-5E jet fighters and M-60 tanks and sending its students and officers to U.S. schools.

Today, it is closely allied to the Soviet Union in a 20-year treaty of friendship and cooperation, indebted to Moscow for $1 billion worth of military hardware and directing all its officers and most civilians allowed abroad to institutions in Eastern Europe.

Ethiopia has become the No. 1 African champion of Vietnam's cause in Southeast Asia and vigorously echoes Soviet attacks on China. But Mengistu obviously feels much closer emotionally to Havana than Moscow and is proud to say that the peoples of revolutionary Cuba and Ethiopia are now "united in blood," as a result of the 1977 war with neighboring Somalia over the disputed Ogaden region.

Cuban combat troops played a key role in Ethiopia's victory and there are still about 15,000 of them stationed mainly in the Ogaden to hold diehard Somali guerrillas in check while Ethiopian forces reconquer the northermost province from Eritrean separatists.

A special brochure has been published in honor of Col. Mengistu's visit to Cuba last April and on the cover he is seen standing next to Castro, saluting proudly. Both are dressed like twins in simple military uniform and wearing web army belts with a pistol hanging on the right side.

One theory circulating in some Western diplomatic circles is that the Soviets would be delighted to have the Ethiopians take over the Cuban military role in Africa, or at least shoulder a part of it. This, it is pointed out, would give Moscow the equivalent of what the West has in Morocco, whose troops have twice flown on French planes to the rescue of Zairian President Mobutu Sese Seko.

The Cubans presumably also would welcome help from the Ethiopians, allowing them to reduce their costly and controversial military presence on the continent and improve their relations with the United States.

Of all black African countries, Ethiopia is probably the most qualified to provide military assistance to revolutionary friends in need. It has a battle-hardened army of 250,000 men, able and experienced pilots and now hardware provided by the Soviets, including Mig-23s.

Questions remain about Mengistu's intentions and Ethiopia's ability to play a larger revolutionary role. It is also unclear whether the Soviets and Cubans will overplay their hand, demand too much and alienate the Ethiopians just as they did the Egyptians, Sudanese and Somalis.

There are some signs of conflict between Ethiopian and Soviet-Cuban objectives in Africa and of differences between Mengistu and his new allies over several sensitive internal political issues.

For the moment, however, they seem to have a lot more in common than in disagreement as Mengistu turns his attention to foreign policy.

Trail of Oldest Hominids Found

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Anthropologist Mary Leakey today announced the discovery of a 75-foot-long trail of footprints made by two individuals walking on a fresh layer of volcanic ash 3.6 million years ago in what is now Tanzania.

The prints are those of the oldest known hominids and Dr. Leakey believes they are direct ancestors of humans.

The footprints, representing a frozen moment in Earth's history, were discovered at Laetolil in northern Tanzania last summer. Ms. Leakey said only the end of the excavation season in September kept scientists from following the trail farther.

"The nature of the terrain leads us to believe that the footprints, though now covered, remained largely intact to the south," she said in a report in the April issue of National Geographic Magazine.

Ms. Leakey said the creatures that made the prints were walking upright, with a free-striding gait not unlike that of humans. She said the form of the foot "was exactly the same as ours."

Ms. Leakey said the role of walking upright in the development of hominids cannot be over-emphasized. She said it more than anything else is what differentiates the forebears of man from other primates.

"This unique ability freed the hands for myriad possibilities — carrying, toolmaking, intricate manipulation. From this single development, in fact, stems all modern technology.

"Somewhat oversimplified, the formula holds that this new freedom of forelimbs posed a challenge. The brain expanded to meet it. And mankind was formed."

Ms. Leakey and coworkers found five fossilized footprints in the area in 1976 and announced that find in 1977. That discovery led to an intensified search last summer.

The new trail was found when Dr. Paul Abell of the University of Rhode Island noticed a barely exposed heel print while he was digging out a block of rhinoceros prints.

Ms. Leakey said one of the individuals was smaller than the other and probably was female.

"At one point, and you need not be an expert tracker to discern this, she stops, pauses, turns to the left to glance at some possible threat or irregularity, and then continues to the north.

Shipping Slipping

LONDON (AEP) — World shipbuilding had its worst year in 10 years last year, with staggering reductions in the tonnage completed in Japan, Sweden, West Germany, Spain and France, says Lloyd's Register of Shipping Statistics published today.

At 18.2 million tons, the total tonnage completed was 9.3 million tons (34 per cent) less than in 1977. The industry had its peak year in 1975 with 35.9 million tons.

Japan headed the shipbuilding table with a total of 6.3 million tons completed, a reduction of 5.4 million tons (46 per cent), or less than one-third of its output three years ago.

Detectors Studied For Namibia Border

UNITED NATIONS (CP) — Five Western foreign ministers have completed their two-day meeting on the UN plan for Namibia without a South African walkout, leaving hope for progress.

One suggestion reported put forward by the Western five to South Africa is the use of electronic detector systems to monitor movement along the 1,500-kilometre border which Namibia shares with Angola.

After seeing UN Security-General Kurt Waldheim late Tuesday, U.S. State Secretary Cyrus Vance said that electronic surveillance might be one way of doing monitoring in Namibia "but I wouldn't put too much emphasis on it."

A South African spokesman confirmed that Maj.-Gen. Jannie Geldenhuys, commander of South African defence forces in Namibia, would remain in the United States for a while "to investigate certain aspects of the discussions, specifically regarding the possibility of the monitoring of the border by devices."

Presumably, Geldenhuys will be going to Washington to talk with U.S. defence officials about the system.

The big question is who will pay for it if it is installed. The system is extremely expensive to operate.

It is known that the South Africans as well as the Rhodesians both have electronic devices in their own defence systems in fighting guerrillas.

Blacks Kill Headman

WINDHOEK (AP) — Black terrorists shot and killed a tribal headman and his wife and set fire to their village in the northern part of Namibia, the South African army announced today.

A spokesman said the headman, Paulus Shanika, was a member of the legislative council in the Ovambo tribal region.

There was no immediate comment from the South-West Africa People's Organisation (SWAPO), which is fighting a guerrilla war for control of the territory.

Angolans Down Six Aircraft

LONDON (Reuter) — The Angolan defence ministry said today its forces have shot down six South African combat planes along the border with Namibia (South-West Africa).

A ministry communique, issued in Luanda and quoted in a message to Reuters news agency, said the planes were shot down on March 13 and 14.

It said wreckage from the planes and captured documents will be put on public display.

The communique said that since the destruction of the planes South African aircraft have been avoiding areas defended by anti-aircraft guns.

The communique said "the military situation in the south, particularly in Cunene Province bordering Namibia, continues to give cause for concern."

Mussles Monitor Mistakes

By AB KENT
Times Staff

The lowly mussel has become a mighty factor in pollution monitoring.

For three years, a $1 million program using the shellfish has helped define the extent of ocean pollution on three U.S. seaboards and come up with the reassurance that so far, there's no danger to public health.

Dr. Edward Goldberg, professor of chemistry at Scripps Institution of Oceanography at La Jolla, Cal., described the Mussel Watch program he initiated Tuesday at a University of Victoria workshop.

The day-long program was presented as part of the university's environmental toxicology program in conjunction with UVic undertakings of a related kind.

Goldberg said a Mussel Watch could be introduced to Canada or to any other area willing to pay the cost and apply the technology.

The program monitors a number of intertidal stations by sampling its mussel population and analyzing their trace metal and radioactive or toxic chemical.

Mussels were chosen because they retain these pollutants within their system and do not eliminate them or filter them out.

Goldberg said research might be directed to the impact of pollution on ecological, physiological, biochemical, and behavioral biology and the health of bivalves.

Some areas of extremely high pollution have been outlined through Mussel Watch but nothing to endanger public health or any other life support system has been turned up, Goldberg said.

In the period 1972-75, pesticide residue in molluses ranged from 100 per cent in Alabama and 96 per cent in California to 18 per cent in Washington, while in 1977 no detectable DDT or other pesticide was found in 85 of 87 stations sampled.

Showcase A Youthful Delight

By AUDREY JOHNSON
Times Staff

For the last two nights the McPherson Playhouse stage has been thronged with colorful groups of Greater Victoria school children and teen-agers and the auditorium has echoed to youthful voices in a wide spectrum of song. The event was A Showcase of School Choirs and it was presented as another innovation for the McPherson Foundation's community arts programming.

Fourteen school choirs participated in the two evenings with a total involvement of 600 youngsters and audiences of close to 1,000.

Each school offered approximately a 10-minute program and some groups included instrumentalists. Among these were Cloverdale Elementary senior choir, directed and accompanied by Ken Bertram. Their performance had the charming addition of a flute obligato played by Leslie McCulloch of Reynolds Secondary.

Oak Bay's Oak Leaf Singers, a mixed choir directed by Charlotte Lane, performed excerpts from Jesus Christ Superstar. They were accompanied by Isabel Ramsey, piano, Woody Woodland, drums, and James Ross, guitar. Tuesday there was Lansdowne Secondary with its Pilot Vocal Jazz Ensemble directed by Tom White and with Geoff Jay, piano, Dayle Oliphant on bass and Al Graham-Marr on drums.

Something different was provided also by Torquay Elementary senior choir. This ensemble, conducted by Roni Frey, added a selected group of instructor Penny Walker's dancers from grades 4 to 7. All these young people — the singers, instrumentalists and dancers — performed with skill and considerable artistry.

One of the features of Tuesday's program was the unaccompanied performance of the Pearson College Choir under its director, Edgar Samuel. The choir's artistic and disciplined performance included Mozart's Piu Non Si Trovano and a Chinese and an English folk song.

Other schools participating, with their directors and piano accompanists were, View Royal Community Choir directed by Lorna Griffiths with Ruth Sample at the piano; Willows Elementary directed by Leanne Erickson, Mrs. E. Spratt accompanist; Victoria High Chorus whose director is Keith Fraser, Amanda Watson, accompanist; Oaklands directed and accompanied by Marie Perlstrom; Monterey, director Laurie Walker with pianist Mrs. A.C. Meadows; Burnside directed by Cheryl Keyes with Isabel Bulman-Fleming at the piano; View Royal Elementary, directed by Alison Pennie with Ruth Sample; Campus View, director Maureen Archambault with Ken Bertram at the piano, and Esquimalt Secondary, director Eileen Thornton and accompanist Janet Young.

Community Arts Council of Greater Victoria, Greater Victoria Music Educators Association and the School Boards of the area cooperated in the presentation. The concerts were recorded in stereo by CFMS and will be broadcast on Saturday mornings, starting this week.

Death Van Called A Cruising Bar

A van involved in a three-vehicle collision in the city which claimed the life of a young woman was described Tuesday night as "a mobile bar cruising around Victoria."

Coroner Edmond Jorre de St. Jorre made the comment in his charge to the jury at the conclusion of an inquest into the death of Janice Campbell, 17, of 1146 Leonard.

The woman was killed Jan. 26 when she was thrown from the back door of the van and pinned against a lamp standard.

He said there was also evidence of drinking, pointed out alcohol had been found in the van, and said that following the accident Cheeke had blood alcohol readings of .07 and .06. The legal impaired level is .08.

Two other occupants in the van, also thrown out onto the street, escaped serious injury, but a passenger in the front seat, Norman Limatta, 18, remains paralysed in hospital.

Evidence given during five nights of testimony indicated the occupants had attended a party at 1664 Burton earlier in the evening and were crusing around the streets looking for somewhere else to go.

The jury said alcohol had a definite bearing on Cheeke's ability to operate his van and recommended "greater parental supervision and care" in matters such as this.

Cheeke has been charged with dangerous driving and a trial date has been set in provincial court in June.

Opening lead - jack of spades.

Sylvia's extraordinary exploits at the bridge table were a never-ending topic of conversation among the members of the club. It was not because she played so badly — there were many, many poor players at the club, especially in the low-stake games. It was rather because of the amazing types of mistakes she made.

This deal must surely rank as one of Sylvia's greatest accomplishments. It occurred soon after she joined the club, and shortly after she had decided to fight fire with fire by adding the falsecard to her already bizarre arsenal of weapons.

Sylvia was West and led the J-10 and another spade, won by South with the ace. Declarer saw that his best chance was to try to establish dummy's hearts, and that this had to be done without permitting East to take the lead. It seemed likely from the bidding that East had the king of hearts, and declarer therefore had to hope that Sylvia had the jack.

Accordingly, he led a diamond to the ace and returned the queen of hearts. East followed low and so did south, but it was now that Sylvia introduced her newest weapon, the falsecard, by playing her jack on the queen! Sylvia hoped that this play would somehow deceive declarer.

But the effect of the falsecard was that South could no longer establish dummy's hearts without surrendering the lead to East. Eventually, declarer went down two.

Had Sylvia made the normal play of the four of hearts on the queen, declarer would surely have made the contract. He would have continued with a low heart from dummy and played the eight from his hand, forcing Sylvia to win the trick with the jack. Nothing could then have stopped South from making three notrump.

SOLUTIONS THURSDAY

YOUR HOROSCOPE

Astrological Forecast for Thursday, March 22
By SIDNEY OMARR

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Accent on goals, challenges, separating fact from fancy. Pisces, Virgo persons figure prominently. You make contact with persons who seemed "out of reach." Imprint views, define terms, consult with one whose intuition is on target.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Accent on bringing priorities into focus, mapping long-range plans, opening lines of communication, pursuing educational projects. Capricorn, Cancer persons figure prominently. Older person — who is affluent — is in your corner.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Added recognition, appearances, before the media could be featured. You complete project. Aries, Libra figure in scenario. Aggressive person confides lack of confidence. Be discreet. Many actually are drawn to you with their "secrets."

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Emphasis on contracts, rights and permissions, obligations, marital status. Leo, Aquarius persons figure prominently. You meet someone who could guide you along a more independent, creative course. Be direct, but let others express their views.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Slow, determined and steady pace should be advocated. Avoid basing actions on impulse. Conservative course will now serve your best interests. Aquarius, Cancer, Capricorn persons play key roles. You could get good news concerning employment, health.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Diversify, broaden horizons, be open to the creative process. Means be ready for change, variety, stimulus of love. Gemini, Sagittarius persons figure prominently. One who admires you shows the way to progress, greater freedom.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Accent on building a secure base. Stick to factual data. One who advocates apparent short cuts is sincere, but may be misguided. Know it, act accordingly. Older family member has your best interests at heart, but is not articulate.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Study Virgo message. Mail, messages, calls, relatives in transit play important roles. Gemini, Virgo persons figure in busy scenario. Be analytical: Trust your own ability as a character analyst. Your ability to discern — and — interpret — subtle nuances is called into play.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Budget, expenditures, payments and collections figure prominently. You learn more about money and how it gets that way. What you need is available — family, home situation are integral parts of the whole. Message should become crystal-clear.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You have added responsibility — reward factor also increases. Your intuition provides answers which had been elusive. Secrets, unusual dreams are also highlighted. Visit to one confined to home or hospital could be on agenda.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Desire is fulfilled — love could come into your life. Aries, Libra and Taurus persons figure prominently. Win rather than force your way. Friendly gesture can pay dividends. Situation that begins as a threat will boomerang in your favor.

IF MARCH 22 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are courageous, dynamic, stubborn, willing to pursue a path which others eschew. You seldom follow the crowd. You felt alienated from one or both parents at a relatively early age. You are an original thinker, somewhat rebellious, attractive to opposite sex. Scorpio, Taurus, Leo persons play important roles in your life. February and November could be your most significant months of 1979, a year featuring domestic change, adjustment, possible change of residence. Family situation is spotlighted in September.

FUN WITH FIGURES

By J. A. H. HUNTER

We have 4569 for the game today. Using all four of them each time, one of each and no other digits at all, you form expressions for the consecutive numbers from one up.

Any arithmetical signs may be used, but no summation for factorial symbols, and no words. Don't forget decimals, regular and repeater, also roots and powers. For example 69+5—4 is a solution for 70.

The limit without a break in continuity seems to be 155 with no special challenges along the way. I shall be glad to check solutions.

Yesterday's answer: GUSTO was 10372 (even).

Rugby Tackle Proves Effective in Saving Threatened Kiwis

AUCKLAND (CP) — Rugby football, New Zealand's national sport, is being put to good use to save a national symbol — the kiwi — from destruction.

One of nature's oddest birds, the kiwi is so rare that few people have seen one alive.

A flightless bird — it has no wings — the kiwi is covered with what looks like brown hair rather than feathers. One reason it seldom is seen is that it lives in deep, dense forest, sleeps in burrows during the day and emerges only at night to forage for earthworms and insects.

It can run extremely fast, but has few other defences.

Unique to New Zealand, the kiwi is protected by law but still is declining in numbers as suitable forest areas are cleared. When forest is burned off for pasture, kiwis run out into the open, but being nocturnal animals they tend to turn on reaching the light and rush back into the flames.

To save endangered kiwis in areas due for clearing, members of conservationist groups have rallied in rescue missions.

If notified by owners before a burnoff is due, they mount expeditions into the forest and scrub areas at night armed with torches, nets and whistles to imitate the high-pitched call of the bird.

When disturbed, the kiwis take evasive action, darting rapidly away, then abruptly changing direction and dashing off on a new tack.

It is here tha rugby football experience proves invaluable. The hunters have found that the run of a kiwi is like that of a footballer trying to elude a tackler, with side-steps and swift changes of pace and direction.

And an orthodox rugby tackle has been found the most effective means of capture — even more so than nets and similar devices. Hunters hurl themselves at the birds, and hold them in a tight grip. Once caught the kiwis tend to remain quiet and can be placed in sacks.

And died beloved by all —Ever remembered by mother and family.

LIVERSIDGE— Fond memories of my dear husband Rex, who entered Eternal Rest on March 21, 1978.
Yea, tho I walk through the Valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for Thou art with me.

To the haven under the hill,
But—oh! for the touch of a vanished hand
And the sound of a voice that is still.
— Sadly remembered by Loving wife Eva.

And we have her in our hearts.

Hen-Chicken Plants Fun

Balcony gardeners always seem on the lookout for ideas which will fit into the limits of the balcony with perhaps an occasional overflow into the adjoining room.

I came across a full page illustration of a workable one in a new (1975 printing) book picked up locally at a ridiculously low price.

The idea illustrated can be worked out in a number of ways with different types of plants. Used for the photograph were Sempervivums, the plant familiar to most gardeners under the name of Hen-and-Chickens, an oldtime folk name for the genus.

These are ground-hugging, sun-loving, stone-enduring rosettes which produce a number of tiny progeny attached by thin stems to the "hen" plant. Clustered around the "hen" the whole set up is reminiscent of the barnyards of old, when real hens were surrounded in the spring sunshine by a clutch of 13 chicks.

So much for nostalgia. On the balcony, or patio, a large shallow box structure is first filled with a mixture of compost and sand to within about two inches of the rim.

Next comes the design you wish to follow in planting, say, about 75 or 100 single rosettes of Sempervivum. You may know there are dozens of species and varieties of this plant, also known as Houseleeks, all with the same general habit of growth. Interest lies in color of the rosettes, leaf shape, and the absence or presence of hairs.

One could begin with the largest rosettes of one kind placed with the bases just touching the soil to make a border in the container. Instead of completing the border, place the last plant of the border a little on the inner part of the container to form another row around without making a break.

Gradually work on this design, using the kinds together, and let them be smaller as they reach the centre which will end as a small square of the smallest rosettes. Intriguing?

There could be about an inch space between rosettes and perhaps an inch and a half between the rows.

White aggregate (chips) can be bought at garden or farm supply stores. These make a good substitute, and probably cost less. Covering the soil serves also to retain a slight dampness in the soil below. In summer a little occasional sprinkle will be needed. Soon the plants become rooted and in no time you have dozens of "chicks" to dispose of. This is a real fun project yet the results have beauty from artistry displayed by the gardener.

Other plants may occur to several of you — herb plants or miniature pelargoniums have possibilities; the principles are the same as for the Hen-and-Chicken setup.

2 Ferries Pried from Ice Prison

Times News Services

NORTH SYDNEY, N.S. — Canadian Coast Guard ice breakers freed two ferries from the ice of the Cabot Strait today and were en route to help two more as truck and car traffic backed up at the mainland terminal here.

Bob Scott, spokesman for Canadian National Marine, said the rail car ferry Frederick Carter was proceeding to Port aux Basques, Newfoundland after being freed from abnormally heavy ice by the ice breaker Labrador late Wednesday morning.

A few hours earlier, the 396-foot ferry Marine Atlantica, which had been held fast in the ice off the coast since Monday with 160 passengers, arrived in port after being set free by Canada's largest ice breaker Louis St. Laurent.

The St. Laurent then set out to aid the CN ferry Marine Nautica which was stranded in ice near Low Point, N.S., about 20 miles north of here with 133 passengers.

The 6,681-ton ferry Sir Robert Bond, with 59 passengers aboard, was also still stranded today in ice about a half nautical mile from the Marine Atlantica, he said.

Normally the trip between Port aux Basques and North Sydney takes about six hours.

CN spokesman Ted Bartlett said the situation will improve only if the winds swing around to the south. This would lessen the pressure on the ice, now being held tight ashore by the northeasterlies.

Even the icebreaker Louis St. Laurent had been having problems, Bartlett said. At one point Tuesday, the icebreaker was making less than a half-knot.

"It's not a case of the ships being unfit for the task — it's the wind forcing the ice together," said Bartlett.

Meanwhile, salvage operations on the stern section of the broken British tanker Kurdistan most likely will take place at Port Hawkesbury, N.S., should officials decide to salvage the wreck, a transport official said Tuesday.

Although no final decision had been made on whether the stern would be salvaged or sunk, Port Hawkesbury would be the port of choice, the official said.

Meetings between Eastern Canada Towing Ltd., the salvor, and agents for the Kurdistan's owners, Nile Shipping Co. of London, England, continued through the day and into the evening.

Thousand Fleeing China As War Loosens Border

By JAY MATHEWS

HONG KONG (WP) — China has witnessed in the past few weeks the most massive exodus of its citizens since the famine year of 1962, the apparent result of economic dissatisfaction and reduced border patrols during the war against Vietnam.

Authorities in Hong Kong, the destination of most of the Chinese leaving the country, say at least 56,000 people have crossed the border legally or illegally in the past 11 weeks, compared to about 100,000 for all of 1978.

The Chinese government in Peking, whose relaxed travel rules have helped stimulate the exodus, has apparently done little so far to stem the flow. The Chinese press in recent months has frankly acknowledged the country's problems of overpopulation and underemployment. The rising tide of city youths swimming or crossing border fences into Hong Kong may ease somewhat urban discontent over lack of jobs and other services that have brought recent demonstrations in several Chinese cities.

Travellers report that Chinese coming into increasing contact with relatively well-to-do foreigners and seeing more reports on Western life in the official Chinese press are outspokenly critical of their own living standards, though often express hope the new government will improve the situation. But Chinese who now have a chance to leave legally because of relatives abroad "All say they want to get out as quickly as possible," said one recent traveller who visited several such families.

The Chinese emigrants deluged the U.S. immigration offiee here with 3,000 visa applications in February alone, compared to a rate of only about 30 a month a year ago. But the brunt of the influx is being absorbed by Hong Kong's overloaded housing and welfare services. Hong Kong officials now anticipate at least 300,000 new residents in this city of 4.5 million this year if the current outflow continues.

"It's bloody frightening," said one Hong-Kong official. So far, several appeals by the British government to Peking have had no apparent effect. Hong Kong Governor Sir Murray Maclahose is expected to raise the matter when he visits Peking later this month, the first visit by a Hong Kong governor to China since the Communist takeover in 1949.

Officials say a particularly significant jump in the number of illegal imigrants since the beginning of the year appears to be due in part to China's invasion of Vietnam. They suggest the war has drawn away some Chinese troops previously used to patrol the portions of Guangdong (Kwangtung) Province near Hong Kong. "Before people might be sneaking over in groups of five or six, but now they can come in groups of 30 or 40," said one observer.

According to a Hong Kong spokesman, 27,598 people with legal exit permits crossed the border this year through last Sunday. In that same period, Hong Kong border police captured 7,061 Chinese attempting to cross the border illegally and turned them back to Chinese border guards. The government estimates that at least four illegal emigrants cross the border undetected for every one that is caught, making a total of at least 28,000 successful illegal emigrants so far this year.

At this rate, the number of people sneaking out of China this year will exceed the estimated total for all last year, about 32,000, by no later than the end of March.

In 1978, about 71,000 people with legal exit permits crossed the border, while 8,192 illegal emigrants were caught and returned to Chinese border officials. Peking has punished unsuccessful escapees lightly, cutting their grain rations slightly and detaining them briefly. Any escapee who manages to elude the Chinese and Hong Kong border guards and reach the urban areas of this British colony is allowed to stay. Several illegal immigrants interviewed here said they made many escape attempts, until finally they succeeded.

According to Hong Kong records, since the Communist takeover of China in 1949 the only period in which the flood of emigrants exceeded this year's occurred in May 1962, when an estimated 50,000 Chinese crossed the border illegally in 23 days. The Great Leap Forward experiments of the late 1950s had collapsed in economic ruin, and bad weather had ruined crops and created a famine. "They were just walking over the fences in droves," said one Briton who witnessed the 1962 influx. The influx reached a peak on May 23, 1962, when 5,000 people crossed the border in a single day.

The 1962 deluge forced the British authorities for a while to arrest the illegal migrants and turn them back to China, something they had not done up to then. Hong Kong had to revive this "repatriation" policy again in 1974, after an estimated 24,000 illegal migrants joined what was then a record 55,000 legal migrants crossing the border.

Diplomatic discussions were held in London and Peking at that time and the number of Chinese entering Hong Kong with exit permits dropped to about 50 a day for a while. The numbers then crept higher, and mushroomed to a rate of about 200 a day last year. The increase in legal emigration grows out of the new, post-Mao Peking government's desire to win favor among overseas Chinese, who provide a lucrative source of investment in the Chinese economy and an important source of political support in regaining control of anti-Communist Taiwan. Local Chinese authorities appear to have been given permission to issue exit permits to Chinese residents whose overseas relatives have asked for them, without any approval from higher authorities.

Many overseas Chinese seeking to bring families out of China live in Hong Kong. Those that live in other parts of the world, except for the United States and Canada, have found it difficult to persuade their home countries' immigration authorities to accept their relatives, and so many have remained here.

Jobless To Rise In B.C.

B.C.'s economic growth will slow this year and the number of unemployed will rise, says a provincial government report released Tuesday.

The ministry of economic development's annual review of economic activity says that the expected rise in the province's gross domestic product — which measures total domestic output of goods and services — will be between 3.5 and 3.7 per cent this year.

That is below the 1978 figure of 4.2 per cent for B.C. Last year the national average was 3.7 per cent.

The slow growth will also effect job prospects.

The report says that the number of available jobs in the province will rise by about three per cent in 1979 but the labor force will grow even faster, so there will be a greater number of unemployed by the end of the year.

In February, B.C.'s unemployment rate jumped to 8.5 per cent, up from 8.2 per cent in the previous month, countering a national trend which saw the rate fall from 8.1 per cent in January to 7.9 per cent. There were 112,000 unemployed in B.C. last month.

The government report says the crucial question in this year's economic picture is how the province will adjust to a 14.5-per-cent increase in the price of Arab crude oil.

$30 Million Flaw Found In Dam Cost

A major weakness in bedrock which contractors say could boost the cost of the $1.5 billion Revelstoke Dam by an extra $30 million has been discovered below the dam site in southeastern B.C.

B.C.Hydro said Tuesday far more rock now must be excavated and more concrete poured than originally planned.

Hydro spokesmen said they could not estimate the cost of the extra work because it might prejudice the bidding process.

However, contractors estimated the cost, for both excavation and concrete at upwards of $30 million.

However, engineers called that estimate "a little high."

The exact cost will not be known until after May 1 when bids on the concrete work are opened and examined.

Hydro spokesman John Sexton said: "The extra excavation is expected to total about 280,000 cubic yards of rock with a corresponding increase in the amount of concrete required to build the dam and power house."

Sexton said bids on the work had been due April 4 but have been extended to May 1 because additional information has been added to the bidding instructions to include the extra excavation.

One construction company executive said the cost of excavating the additional soft rock could run to about $15 a yard.

He said cost of the extra concrete needed to replace the rock could be in the range of $50 to $90 a yard. This was the basis of the estimate of $30 million in added costs.

The cost of the dam with four turbines in place is estimated at $1.5 billion.

The project is expected to go on stream with four units in 1983.

Hydro would not say whether the extra work will delay completion.

The dam was given the go-ahead only after a prolonged public dispute involving the Society for Pollution and Environmental Control (SPEC), which opposed its construction on the grounds Hydro's growth projections were inflated.

Ottawa Wants Vitamin Ads Curbed on TV

BURLINGTON, Ont. (CP) — The federal drug directorate is proposing limits be placed on the claims vitamin advertisers can make on television, the head of the directorate says.

Dr. Bert Liston said in a telephone interview from Ottawa that his office, part of the health and welfare department, also is investigating the possibility of putting vitamins with a high iron content on the restricted drugs list.

The recommendations have been forwarded to Health Minister Monique Begin.

If she accepts the recommendations the public will be asked for suggestions and comments to develop a national policy, Liston said.

Ruth Bayne, head of Burlington's poison information centre, said that since Jan. 1, the centre at Joseph Brant Hospital in this community southwest of Toronto has admitted 19 cases of vitamin overdose among children aged two to five, about double the usual rate.

She said none of the children was seriously ill, but there was a potential for tragedy.

Last month, Miss Bayne wrote several letters to authorities in Ottawa calling for vitamin pills to be made prescription drugs and she asked that a ban be placed on TV advertising of vitamins aimed at children.

Liston said he basically agreed with Miss Bayne's arguments about vitamins, but he said he has not heard of any outbreak of vitamin poisoning of children.

Miss Bayne said repeated massive overdoses of vitamin A can cause brain damage and repeated overdoses of vitamin D can cause bone deterioration.

High concentrations of iron can cause internal bleeding and even one overdose can be lethal, she said.

"Literally it burns a hole in the stomach."

W. R. Wensley, registrar of the Ontario College of Physicians and Surgeons, said the vitamin situation should be watched closely.

But Wensley said the college does not advocate that vitamins be prescription drugs.

The college wants vitamins with doses stronger than a dietary supplement, along with a small number of prescription vitamins, to be sold only in pharmacies, he said.

Four Loggers Arrested

By MARK HUME
Times Staff

Four loggers have been arrested in the Queen Charlotte Islands along with an administrator for Q.C. Timber Ltd. in a dispute over a tract of timber recently put off limits by federal fisheries.

A spokesman for the company said today that three of the fallers and the administrator were arrested in camp Tuesday night.

The fourth faller had been arrested Monday.

The company spokesman said he understood the administrator was under armed guard at the logging camp.

Meanwhile about ten women, some of them the wives of the arrested loggers, picketed federal fisheries offices in Queen Charlotte City at noon today and paraded through the streets carrying placards.

The company spokesman said he wasn't sure whether or not the remaining loggers at the camp planned to return to the restricted area and resume cutting.

A fisheries official in the Queen Charlottes said that the fallers had been charged with undertaking work that resulted in the destruction of fish habitat.

It is understood that the company administrator has been charged with counselling an offence.

Q.C. Timber Ltd. is also facing charges.

Under the federal Fisheries Act the accused could face fines of up to $50,000 or two years in jail.

At issue is a 40-acre tract of timber over-looking Riley Creek, a salmon stream on Rennell Sound.

The fisheries department and the provincial forest service have been battling for jurisdictional control of the area.

"We'er caught up in an intergovernmental dispute," said the Q.C. Timber spokesman. "And a lot of little people seem to be paying an awfully high price for it."

Air Ban Threat Hollow?

OTTAWA (CP) — The Canadian government "does not expect" that American authorities will follow through with a threat to block Air Canada's introduction of bargain-rate flights to the United States, says Transport minister Otto Lang.

But Lang conceded in the Commons Tuesday that only American authorities could say with certainty what will happen because the matter "is in their hands."

Officials of the U.S. Civil Aeronautics Board are currently deliberating whether to limit their displeasure to the "dissatisfaction" notice or go all the way and actallly block the flights.

Conservative MP Jack Murta (Lisgar) told Lang his comments were "cold comfort" to the people who hoped to fill 147,000 seats on Air Canada flights to the U.S. during bargain fare period.

U.S. authorities are said to be unhappy over Ottawa's rejection in recent months of several proposals for cheaper cross-border flights by American air crarriers.

Airport Chaos

LONDON (UPI) — A 24-hour strike by immigration officials severely disrupted London's Heathrow airport today, causing queues 300 yards long at passport control and leading to long delays on international flights.

Begin Tough Talk Stirs All-Out War Demands

Times News Services

The Saudi Arabian press, which invariably reflects government thinking, called today for an all-out Arab war against Israel to regain Jerusalem and other occupied Arab territory.

The outburst of editorial wrath followed a forceful statement in the Israeli parliament in Jerusalem on Tuesday by Prime Minister Menachem Begin as he opened debate on the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty.

Begin said Israel will never accept the re-division of Jerusalem or relinquish its status as "Israel's eternal capital," never withdraw to its pre-1967 borders or ever allow the establishment of a Palestinian state.

Begin's tough talk about the fate of Jewish-occupied territories also nearly caused a brawl in the Egyptian Parliament.

His vow not to return to Israel's pre-1967 borders rubbed raw nerves in Cairo, where members of the Egyptian Parliament met today to discuss the treaty.

Independent member Farouk Metwalli urged condemnation of Begin's statements, which he said were "grave and have an even more grave significance."

Ahmed Nasser, another member known for his leftist leanings, took the floor to denounce Begin and ignored an order from the speaker to be silent.

A front-page editorial in Al Jezira called on all Arab states to prepare for a long and continuous war and to allow the Palestinian resistance to fight on all fronts "until they turn the occupied lands into a blazing inferno for the enemy."

Similar calls for preparations for a "long war" were also voiced in radical Iraq.

Al Thawra, the official newspaper of the ruling Socialist Baath party, said:

"The Arab masses must change any war that Israel launched from a limited one, as Israel would like, to a liberation war, whose duration and severity would be determined by the Arab masses and not by the Zionist enemy."

Khomeini Tries To Calm Kurds

SANANDAJ, Iran (CP) — Heavy fighting raged in the streets of this western Kurdish city near the Iraqi border today as Ayatollah Khomeini sent religious leaders to the scene on a desperate mission to secure peace.

Kurdish rebels surrounding the 28th Iranian Infantry Division barracks exchanged rifle and machine-gun fire with the besieged troops for the third consecutive day after yet another ceasefire attempt broke down.

As mortar fire burst over the town, Kurdish guerrillas dashed from tree to tree up the main avenue, firing rapid automatic rounds toward the army garrison.

It was impossible to calculate the casualties. But the Kurdish fighters reported 80 of their own men killed since the fighting began last Sunday night and that 20 soldiers had died.

The Voice of the Revolution radio in Teheran said Ayatollah Khomeini's chief religious representative in the capital and other Moslem leaders had been sent to Sanandaj.

It said they were going "to investigate the situation and attend to the demands of the Kurdish people," who have been pressing for autonomy ever since the Shah was toppled last month.

Khomeini and most Iranians belong to the Shiite sect of Islam. The Kurds are almost all Sunnis.

By LEONARD DOWNIE

LONDON (WP) — Former South African information official Eschel Rhoodie says he has documentary proof that the entire South African cabinet knew and approved of an illegal multi-million-dollar campaign to buy foreign and domestic support for South Africa's apartheid government.

In a BBC television interview taped for broadcast here Wednesday night, Rhoodie said he had "certain key documentation containing signatures of, for example," John Vorster, the former prime minister, who is now president of South Africa, and Owen Horwood, the finance minister.

Rhoodie gave the BBC a photostat copy of this document to present on television, which Rhoodie said should lead to the resignation of the present prime minister.

South African government officials today strongly denied earlier allegations made by Rhoodie.

Prime Minister Pieter Botha, who promised to resign if it is shown he knew that the government misused taxpayer money to bolster its image abroad, said the scandal has no connection with the murders of Dr. and Mrs. Robert Smit.

"Any inference that there is a connection between the two would be totally wrong," a spokesman for Botha said.

As the influence-buying scandal unfolded in South Africa in recent weeks, Botha vowed to resign and call new national elections if it was proven that anyone in his cabinet was involved.

Rhoodie, who is hiding in Europe from the South African authorities said in the BBC interview that he also had "safely locked away in a bank vault somewhere in Europe" another "massive document" detailing all the "secret projects over the past five years, including current projects," in which South African money was spent to buy foreign support.

He said this document contained "a summary of the projects, including who received what and the names of people in the Declaring 1979 International Year of the Child is fine. But what does it mean to you, the parent?

Aiming at drawing world attention to the needs of children, the United Nations during this year is urging all countries to respect the rights of the young. Yet rights are not very tangible things. Then neither are love nor time.

And so, is it intended that we shape up for a year; that just for 1979 we show our children more affection and quit knocking them about both physically and verbally? Or should this International Year of the Child be merely a transition, a period of awareness and the start of a better relationship between parents and their offspring?

Remembering a father who was distantly interested but usually too busy, the key to me has always seemed involvement. Don't send your kids off to do something. Do it with them. Or at least go along and watch. Sure, it takes up your time and it isn't always easy, of course, when there are several children or perhaps broken homes, but each of us can only do his or her best.

Just the other day I met a Victoria boy, 15 but looking younger, who comes from a single-parent family where things haven't been easy. But he was chosen because of his manners and his endeavors for a special trip to Ottawa.

Jason Merriman was one of only two from B.C. (the other was Gail George of Nanaimo) included among the 21 young people from across the country, members of the Boys and Girls Clubs of Canada, who carried a proclamation on the International Year of the Child to Ottawa.

There, they bunked in the Centretown Boys and Girls Club, presented the proclamation (supporting and commending the U.N. for declaring 1979 International Year of the Child) to John Diefenbaker at a pageant, met Prime Minister Trudeau, visited the Science Museum and went to a disco dance.

And what was his biggest thrill? "Meeting Mr. Diefenbaker," Jason said. What, more than the disco dance? And how about Mr. Trudeau?

"Oh, I don't know, he was in quite a rush really," Jason explained. "He was only there a moment or two. We gave him a copy of the proclamation as well and then he had to leave."

A Grade 9 student at Central junior high school, Jason pops across the road after school every weekday to the Boys and Girls Club where he enjoys playing floor hockey and pool and likes to do pottery and woodwork.

"We like to think we provide something recreation centres don't," Stan Warlow, the club's new executive director who moved here from a club in Niagara Falls, Ont., two months ago, said. "Our staff tries to get to know all the children and to help them develop their social skills."

For the Ottawa trip, young people who were good members and were helpful around the club were chosen, program director Mirella Spinelli explained.

When I asked Jason why he thought he was picked, he said: "Because of my reputation around here . . . that's all Mirella told me."

Jason Merriman shares with me the belief that parents' interest in, encouragement of and involvement with their children are the most important ingredients for producing more responsible young people and making Canada an even better country. There are parents I know who give their children everything, but precious little of their time.

With the 20 other young people from the Boys and Girls Clubs of Canada, Jason believes he took this message not only to those in high places in Ottawa but to the moms and dads back home.

The boy who has one younger sister and who dreams one day of becoming an auto mechanic explained his trip:

"It was an experience to get the message across to our parents to love and give affection to their children so they can grow up in a proper manner instead of hanging around street corners."

All-Out War To Decide Island Fate On Milfoil

By PAUL NICHOLSON
Times Staff

Vancouver Island lakes have escaped the Eurasian milfoil invasion.

And if the environment ministry's counter-attack on the lake-choking weed this summer is a success, the island will remain weed-free.

According to the province's director of aquatic plant management, Dr. Peter Newroth, it's not going to be an easy war, although he feels it can be won.

But judging from the weed's early victories and the ministry's Dunkirk-like retreat at Lake Okanagan, Newroth may exhibiting a bit of Churchillian pre-battle optimism.

The Eurasian milfoil's success in its blitzkrieg throughout parts of the province are staggering. Here's how it stacks up:

—Lake Okanagan: Defensive action only. Some weed cutting in prime recreation spots. Last year some 800 to 900 acres of the lake infested and spreading rapidly. Too late for chemical control.

—Milfoil identified in 40 water systems in the lower mainland and Fraser Valley covering about 1,000 acres. In 1977, weed found in five areas encompassing 50 to 100 acres.

—Weed is firmly established in Vancouver's showplace, Queen Elizabeth Park, and in the new Van Dusen Botanical Gardens.

Shore-to-Shore in Three Years

—The first identification in the lower mainland was in Delta's Centennial Park three years ago. Today the lake is shore-to-shore Eurasian milfoil.

Milfoil thrives in water in warmer climates, making its control more difficult in the lower mainland and giving rise to fears that it would spread quickly if established on Vancouver Island.

—The weed is easily transferred from lake to lake. Boats and boat trailers are the main cause, but it is suspected even waterfowl can carry it to new areas.

Last year, 8,500 boats were checked at roadside stops. Almost one-quarter of them were found to be carrying milfoil fragments.

Newroth has put forward a $1 million proposal to the ministry designed to stop the spread to the Kootenays, the Cariboo and the Island.

The plan has two elements — increased roadside checks manned seven days a week and more detailed surveys in the prime recreation areas still untouched so any new infestation can be hit quickly and hard.

In fact, the ministry has standing permits from the Pollution Control Branch to spray 2,4-D on 20 lakes throughout the province on a moment's notice.

Last year a court battle prevented most of the spraying the ministry wanted to do. And by the time the ministry won the court action, it was too late in the year to carry out the spraying.

Photosynthesis Cut-Off Possible

But that won't be a problem this year.

New technology is also in the offing. One designer has developed a cutting machine that may kill milfoil plants as well as keep the weed well below the water surface.

The theory behind the machine is that the weed is cut regularly below the surface so its fronds never get near the surface for photosynthesis and the plant eventually dies.

Five roadside checks will be set up — two at the mainland ferry terminals, one at Hope and one at both the north and south ends of the Okanagan Valley.

There is no existing legislation forcing people towing boats to bring them in for an examination, but they will be encouraged to do so.

The check should only take a few minutes, and if weed fragments are found on the trailer or boat, they will be hosed off by workers at the check stops.

"It will be nice to get a jump on the plant for a change," Newroth says.

He says he'd been urging quick action for several years, but the unknowns about the effects of 2,4-D dictated caution.

But all that time the weed grew and now there is a huge problem.

First Ferry Rush This Weekend

B.C. Ferries Corp. has put on extra sailings and advised Victorians to get an early start this weekend to avoid the first major traffic crunch of the season.

"Spring break starts Friday and we know it will be crowded," traffic manager Bill Bouchard said today.

"The worst times will be Friday afternoon and evening and again on Saturday morning.

"We have carried out a publicity campaign encouraging people to leave early but we know many people can't get away until their children are out of school. It will be a busy afternoon."

He said anyone who can possibly leave Friday should do so and avoid the crowds. If they are not leaving until Saturday they would be advised to wait until after lunch.

The irony is that Saturday afternoons are often very quiet even on the busiest weekends.

Every available ferry will be pressed into service but there are limits because of loading facilities and available crews at this time of year.

A new schedule will be in effect, starting Thursday, with morning sailing times from Swartz Bay of 7, 8, 9, 11 and noon followed by 1, 3, 4, 5, 7, 8 and 9. There is bus service on all but the 8 a.m. sailing. In addition there are trips of the truck ferry, Queen of Alberni, at 11:15 a.m. and 3:15 p.m.

Buffet service will start Friday aboard all ferries on the Swartz Bay-Tsawwassen route from 5 p.m. onwards at $6.50. The service will be continued daily until April 2, the end of the spring break holiday, when it will revert to an availablility on Fridays, Sundays and holidays only until June 14.

"We have found we can make money with the buffet at peak travelling times only and that's when the service will be offered."

Full buffet service, including breakfast, lunch and dinner will start June 14 and and will continue all summer.

The corporation is also revising its menus for its regular cafeteria service.

Esquimalt Murder Charged

A 42-year-old seaman has been charged with second degree murder in connection with the death Monday of a 46-year-old man in an apartment in Esquimalt.

George Ronald Wyatt of 104-1007 Esquimalt Road, a seaman on board the Canadian Coast Guard weathership Vancouver is to appear in provincial court.

Esquimalt police Insp. Peter Merriott said Wyatt was arrested Tuesday following an investigation into the cause of death of Charles Emmanual John Devine.

Devine's body was found by police answering an ambulance call to Wyatt's apartment at 7:30 a.m. Monday.

Merriott said the man died some time during the night.

Officers at first believed the man might have died from accidental causes.

Barbless Hook About-Face Charge Hurled

A spokesman for sports salmon fishermen said today said they are roaring, howling mad over new regulations proposed by the federal fisheries department.

Among the suggested changes is the elimination of barbed and treble hooks and an increase in the minimum length of fish an angler would be permitted to keep.

Al Playfair, chairman of the B.C. Sports Fishery Advisory Board which met at the weekend in Nanaimo, said members believe the fisheries department did an about-face on the barbless hooks.

Representatives of the 350,000-strong sports fishing industry believed they had reached an understanding with federal representatives on the subject, Playfair said.

"If they haven't the guts to stand up to their decision, they should pack it up," he said.

It took three years to reach an agreement with fishermen on size and catch limits and on the principle of sports fishing licences to control the fishery and provide some funding for salmonid enhancement.

"If there is any attempt to choke us with the barbless hook, it will take only three minutes to rupture it," Playfair warned.

He said it would be easy to circumvent such an order, and predicted sports fishermen would defy it.

Playfair said sports fishermen only agreed to offer to test the barbless hook for salmon fishing.

"Some of us, of our own volition, would do some barbless hook fishing," he said.

Federal officials say barbless hooks allow undersized fish to be caught, then released without injury.

Barbed and treble hooks make damage more likely because they are difficult to remove, with the result that many fish die shortly after they are released.

The department also proposes raising the size limit from 12 to 18 inches for all species, but Playfair said the upper limit for chinook salmon could be set as high as 20. Fishermen say they would prefer a 16-inch minimum.

A Campbell River Chamber of Commerce spokesman said a barbless hook ban would seriously damage a $40-million fishing and tourist industry.

"Any fisherman who loses a 50-pound tyee (salmon) because he is forced to fish with a barbless hook won't come back next year," he said.

Pacific region fisheries management advisory council is to make a recommendation April 11 for consideration by the department at Ottawa.

Second Logging Death

Sooke RCMP said John Alexander Gordon of 626 Simcoe was killed instantly when a dead snag, 30 feet long and two feet thick, crashed down on top of him while falling at a Pacific Logging site 30 miles northwest of Sooke. The accident happened at about 11 a.m.

Last Friday 23-year-old Robert John Plester was killed when a huge limb broke off the top of a tree he was falling and pierced his chest.

Grouse Nest Moving Day

Two deputy sheriff's officers arrived this morning with a moving van to assist owner Hasaam Kamil in vacating the 560-acre waterfront property in East Sooke.

The action follows a Supreme Court writ of possession issued last summer to Laurel Properties Ltd. of Vancouver with whom Kamil had defaulted on a $1.35 million mortgage secured three years ago.

Kamil declined to comment on the foreclosure this morning.

"It's the system, I guess," he explained dolefully. "I can't do anything about that."

He would not say where he will be moving to or what he plans to do with his other holdings which include 2,000 acres in the Highlands.

A sheriff's department spokesman said Kamil's goods and belongings will be taken off the property and placed in vans alongside Gillespie Road. From there Kamil will presumably make storage arrangements.

Kamil bought the property in the early 1960s and after a short, unsuccessful venture running the place as a resort, had made it his private residence, until today.

Three-Mill Hike Looms

Greater Victoria property owners will face a three-mill increase in school taxes this year, according to the calculations of district administrators.

A mill rate increase from 43.4 in 1978 to 46.5 in 1979 has been computed, the board's legal and financial advisor Ernie Shaw told a special meeting between trustees and Victoria and Oak Bay city council members Tuesday.

The 7 per cent increase in the mill rate is mainly due to a reduction in the province's share of education costs.

During the past four years the basic mill levy applied to education costs has increased from 31.75 to 41.68 mills, adding almost two mills.

Incentive grants given by the provincial government this year to the district will reduce the tax bill by about $400,000, or .6 mills.

Trustee Behavior Flabbergasts Pickup

By LORRAINE LOCHERTY
Times Staff

Greater Victoria school board chairman Carol Pickup today said she was flabbergasted by the actions of some trustees Tuesday night during a special budget discussion with Victoria and Oak Bay.

"I was disappointed by the lack of loyalty and support demonstrated," Pickup said, adding she thought the board had agreed to smooth philosophical differences for the evening.

Pickup said she was particularly upset with trustee Peter Yorke, who opposed her on most issues, including the seating arrangements.

But Pickup said she is generally satisfied with the meeting, set up as an informal talk about budget items and the education ministry's funding formula.

Pickup said today she hoped the board and municipalities could make a combined approach to government to protest its shift of the burden of education spending to local taxypayers, but realized the idea was "beautiful but unlikely."

Arranged at the request of Victoria and Oak Bay councils, it started with a detailed explanation of the school board's 1979 budget and the education ministry's finance formula.

Aldermen and trustees were divided into three discussion groups, a seating strategy designed by Pickup to avoid confrontation.

But assigning seperate tables didn't prevent flareups.

Oak Bay mayor Brian Smith said he came to the meeting expecting a free and open exchange. "After all, we both have to reach into the same taxpayers' pockets."

Then Yorke said he didn't like the seating plan either and was disappointed in the agenda.

"It was my impression aldermen would be asking political questions," he said.

Pickup said the board was using the ministry's decreasing share of education spending as a "scapegoat" and that the real problem is spiralling school costs.

Pickup told the group that the board feels educational quality is just as important as fiscal restraint; the needs of students come first.

Eleven teaching positions added this year will be split between a much-needed careers program and remedial and diagnostic services at the junior high school level and decreasing large class size in elementary schools.

Pickup pointed out that the loss of 1,000 students this year means the district also loses about $1 million in government revenue.

Trustee Martin Levin explained 80 per cent of the operating budget is arbitrated teacher salaries and beyond board control.

He said the board is not prepared to follow Saanich School District's hold-the-line approach and cut additional teaching positions to keep budgeted teacher salary increases at 6 per cent.

But Trustee Glyn Williams said not all trustees on the board agree with the majority's point of view.

Greater Victoria Teachers Association president Trevor Calkins told the meeting Saanich's pupil-teacher ratio is already lower than Greater Victoria's and that the district would have to increase staff by about 75 teachers to catch up to it.

Victoria Ald. Bill McElroy said he noticed the board had philosophical differences but commented "a mill on my house is $7 and you're welcome to it."

At the end of the meeting Victoria and Oak Bay invited the board to drop in on their upcoming budget discussions.

dear abby

DEAR ABBY: My mother lives in another town. She keeps asking me to visit her, but it's such a drag I seldom go, so she comes to visit me.

I am 28, female and married. For years I avoided visiting mother because her sister lives in the same town and I always had to go to see her, too. The minute I walked through my aunt's door she would "weigh" me with her eyes, then start in on me about how I should lose some weight. Now my mother has started to do the same thing.

Abby, I have tried every diet there is and none has worked. So I've decided to accept myself as I am, and as long as my husband is satisfied, to heck with everyone else!

When mother left, she asked when I was coming to visit her, so I wrote her a letter (which I haven't mailed yet) and told her that I would visit her after I shed 50 pounds.

Am I being overly sensitive and unable to accept criticism, or am I justified in my feelings of irritation?

HEAVY PROBLEM

DEAR HEAVY: Yours is a heavier problem than shedding 50 pounds. It's shedding the role of a little girl who desperately needs mama's approval.

I'm sure your mother means well, but she must be told that you are now an adult in charge of your own life, and until she quits treating you as a child, you will not visit her.

DEAR ABBY: Karen is my best friend. We are both 15. Karen spends a lot of time at my house. When my father is home, he has a habit of kissing Karen on the lips whenever she arrives and goes home. Do you consider this proper behavior for a 38-year-old man?

Also, my father is always trying to get Karen to sit on his lap. Sometimes she does and sometimes she doesn't. I don't know if this is embarrassing to Karen or not. As a daughter it doesn't bother me, but I sure wouldn't want Karen's father kissing me on the lips or asking me to come sit on his lap.

What is your opinion?

DADDY'S DAUGHTER

DEAR DAUGHTER: I think Karen is a little too OLD to be kissed on the lips by your father. And your father is too YOUNG to have a 15-year-old girl on his lap.

DEAR ABBY: About artificial insemination: When a man's sperm count is low and he wants to father a child, why not ask the sperm bank to combine his sperm with the sperm of an anonymous donor? Then when pregnancy occurs from the mixed sperm insemination, there is always the possibility that one of his sperm made it after all!

CHUKMAH

DEAR [illegible]: Why not, indeed? [illegible]mination experts tell [illegible]hat technique has bee[illegible] ed often.

Teachers To Study Dropouts

TORONTO (CP) — An Ontario teachers' group plans to spend $100,000 to find out why two-thirds of the students enrolled in the four-year general high school program drop out.

Peter Norman, chairman of the Ontario Secondary School Teachers' Federation research committee, said the federation will spend $100,000 in the next two years to study why the dropout rate is so high and what should be done to keep the students in school.

He said the first phase of the study will ask dropouts from 10 schools and their current employers to evaluate the school system.

Norman said the federation started its studies when it became clear there was a shortage of skilled persons in Canada.

The studies may show that high schools should provide more technical training so students can obtain specific skills.

About 30 per cent of high school students enrol in the four-year program to prepare for community college. Sixty per cent are enrolled in the advanced stream which leads to university and 10 per cent are in special education classes for students with learning problems.

Jobless To Rise In B.C.

B.C.'s economic growth will slow this year and the number of unemployed will rise, says a provincial government report released Tuesday.

The ministry of economic development's annual review of economic activity says that the expected rise in the province's gross domestic product — which measures total domestic output of goods and services — will be between 3.5 and 3.7 per cent this year.

That is below the 1978 figure of 4.2 per cent for B.C. Last year the national average was 3.7 per cent.

The slow growth will also effect job prospects.

The report says that the number of available jobs in the province will rise by about three per cent in 1979 but the labor force will grow even faster, so there will be a greater number of unemployed by the end of the year.

In February, B.C.'s unemployment rate jumped to 8.5 per cent, up from 8.2 per cent in the previous month, countering a national trend which saw the rate fall from 8.1 per cent in January to 7.9 per cent. There were 112,000 unemployed in B.C. last month.

The government report says the crucial question in this year's economic picture is how the province will adjust to a 14.5-per-cent increase in the price of Arab crude oil.

$30 Million Flaw Found In Dam Cost

A major weakness in bedrock which contractors say could boost the cost of the $1.5 billion Revelstoke Dam by an extra $30 million has been discovered below the dam site in southeastern B.C.

B.C.Hydro said Tuesday far more rock now must be excavated and more concrete poured than originally planned.

Hydro spokesmen said they could not estimate the cost of the extra work because it might prejudice the bidding process.

However, contractors estimated the cost, for both excavation and concrete at upwards of $30 million.

However, engineers called that estimate "a little high."

The exact cost will not be known until after May 1 when bids on the concrete work are opened and examined.

Hydro spokesman John Sexton said: "The extra excavation is expected to total about 280,000 cubic yards of rock with a corresponding increase in the amount of concrete required to build the dam and power house."

Sexton said bids on the work had been due April 4 but have been extended to May 1 because additional information has been added to the bidding instructions to include the extra excavation.

One construction company executive said the cost of excavating the additional soft rock could run to about $15 a yard.

He said cost of the extra concrete needed to replace the rock could be in the range of $50 to $90 a yard. This was the basis of the estimate of $30 million in added costs.

The cost of the dam with four turbines in place is estimated at $1.5 billion.

The project is expected to go on stream with four units in 1983.

Hydro would not say whether the extra work will delay completion.

The dam was given the go-ahead only after a prolonged public dispute involving the Society for Pollution and Environmental Control (SPEC), which opposed its construction on the grounds Hydro's growth projections were inflated.

Ottawa Wants Vitamin Ads Curbed on TV

BURLINGTON, Ont. (CP) — The federal drug directorate is proposing limits be placed on the claims vitamin advertisers can make on television, the head of the directorate says.

Dr. Bert Liston said in a telephone interview from Ottawa that his office, part of the health and welfare department, also is investigating the possibility of putting vitamins with a high iron content on the restricted drugs list.

The recommendations have been forwarded to Health Minister Monique Begin.

If she accepts the recommendations the public will be asked for suggestions and comments to develop a national policy, Liston said.

Ruth Bayne, head of Burlington's poison information centre, said that since Jan. 1, the centre at Joseph Brant Hospital in this community southwest of Toronto has admitted 19 cases of vitamin overdose among children aged two to five, about double the usual rate.

She said none of the children was seriously ill, but there was a potential for tragedy.

Last month, Miss Bayne wrote several letters to authorities in Ottawa calling for vitamin pills to be made prescription drugs and she asked that a ban be placed on TV advertising of vitamins aimed at children.

Liston said he basically agreed with Miss Bayne's arguments about vitamins, but he said he has not heard of any outbreak of vitamin poisoning of children.

Miss Bayne said repeated massive overdoses of vitamin A can cause brain damage and repeated overdoses of vitamin D can cause bone deterioration.

High concentrations of iron can cause internal bleeding and even one overdose can be lethal, she said.

"Literally it burns a hole in the stomach."

W. R. Wensley, registrar of the Ontario College of Physicians and Surgeons, said the vitamin situation should be watched closely.

But Wensley said the college does not advocate that vitamins be prescription drugs.

The college wants vitamins with doses stronger than a dietary supplement, along with a small number of prescription vitamins, to be sold only in pharmacies, he said.

Four Loggers Arrested

By MARK HUME
Times Staff

Four loggers have been arrested in the Queen Charlotte Islands along with an administrator for Q.C. Timber Ltd. in a dispute over a tract of timber recently put off limits by federal fisheries.

A spokesman for the company said today that three of the fallers and the administrator were arrested in camp Tuesday night.

The fourth faller had been arrested Monday.

The company spokesman said he understood the administrator was under armed guard at the logging camp.

Meanwhile about ten women, some of them the wives of the arrested loggers, picketed federal fisheries offices in Queen Charlotte City at noon today and paraded through the streets carrying placards.

The company spokesman said he wasn't sure whether or not the remaining loggers at the camp planned to return to the restricted area and resume cutting.

A fisheries official in the Queen Charlottes said that the fallers had been charged with undertaking work that resulted in the destruction of fish habitat.

It is understood that the company administrator has been charged with counselling an offence.

Q.C. Timber Ltd. is also facing charges.

Under the federal Fisheries Act the accused could face fines of up to $50,000 or two years in jail.

At issue is a 40-acre tract of timber over-looking Riley Creek, a salmon stream on Rennell Sound.

The fisheries department and the provincial forest service have been battling for jurisdictional control of the area.

"We'er caught up in an intergovernmental dispute," said the Q.C. Timber spokesman. "And a lot of little people seem to be paying an awfully high price for it."

Air Ban Threat Hollow?

OTTAWA (FP) — The Canadian government "does not expect" that American authorities will follow through with a threat to block Air Canada's introduction of bargain-rate flights to the United States, says Transport minister Otto Lang.

But Lang conceded in the Commons Tuesday that only American authorities could say with certainty what will happen because the matter "is in their hands."

Officials of the U.S. Civil Aeronautics Board are currently deliberating whether to limit their displeasure to the "dissatisfaction" notice or go all the way and actallly block the flights.

Conservative MP Jack Murta (Lisgar) told Lang his comments were "cold comfort" to the people who hoped to fill 147,000 seats on Air Canada flights to the U.S. during bargain fare period.

U.S. authorities are said to be unhappy over Ottawa's rejection in recent months of several proposals for cheaper cross-border flights by American air crarriers.

Airport Chaos

LONDON (UPI) — A 24-hour strike by immigration officials severely disrupted London's Heathrow airport today, causing queues 300 yards long at passport control and leading to long delays on international flights.

Begin Tough Talk Stirs All-Out War Demands

Times News Services

The Saudi Arabian press, which invariably reflects government thinking, called today for an all-out Arab war against Israel to regain Jerusalem and other occupied Arab territory.

The outburst of editorial wrath followed a forceful statement in the Israeli parliament in Jerusalem on Tuesday by Prime Minister Menachem Begin as he opened debate on the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty.

Begin said Israel will never accept the re-division of Jerusalem or relinquish its status as "Israel's eternal capital," never withdraw to its pre-1967 borders or ever allow the establishment of a Palestinian state.

Begin's tough talk about the fate of Jewish-occupied territories also nearly caused a brawl in the Egyptian Parliament.

His vow not to return to Israel's pre-1967 borders rubbed raw nerves in Cairo, where members of the Egyptian Parliament met today to discuss the treaty.

Independent member Farouk Metwalli urged condemnation of Begin's statements, which he said were "grave and have an even more grave significance."

Ahmed Nasser, another member known for his leftist leanings, took the floor to denounce Begin and ignored an order from the speaker to be silent.

A front-page editorial in Al Jezira called on all Arab states to prepare for a long and continuous war and to allow the Palestinian resistance to fight on all fronts "until they turn the occupied lands into a blazing inferno for the enemy."

Similar calls for preparations for a "long war" were also voiced in radical Iraq.

"The Arab masses must change any war that Israel launched from a limited one, as Israel would like, to a liberation war, whose duration and severity would be determined by the Arab masses and not by the Zionist enemy."

Cossitt Facing Ejection

OTTAWA (CP) — Conservative Tom Cossitt, a thorn in the side of the government for many years, was "named" in the Commons Wednesday — and was to be ejected from the chamber later.

Speaker James Jerome took the action after Cossitt refused to withdraw a remark that Prime Minister Trudeau deliberately misled the Commons.

After Jerome named the MP from the Ontario constituency of Leeds, Deputy Prime Minister Allan MacEachen moved that he be suspended for the rest of the day.

The vote on that, to come later in the day, was certain to be in the affirmative.

The issue quickly blew up after Cossitt joined a number of Conservatives complaining that the government was ignoring answers to their written questions.

The Brockville, Ont. MP personally challenged the prime minister to stand and explain why his questions about public expenditures for Trudeau's home and office have not been answered.

By LEONARD DOWNIE

LONDON (WP) — Former South African information official Eschel Rhoodie says he has documentary proof that the entire South African cabinet knew and approved of an illegal multi-million-dollar campaign to buy foreign and domestic support for South Africa's apartheid government.

In a BBC television interview taped for broadcast here Wednesday night, Rhoodie said he had "certain key documentation containing signatures of, for example," John Vorster, the former prime minister, who is now president of South Africa, and Owen Horwood, the finance minister.

Rhoodie gave the BBC a photostat copy of this document to present on television, which Rhoodie said should lead to the resignation of the present prime minister.

Prime Minister Pieter Botha, who promised to resign if it is shown he knew that the government misused taxpayer money to bolster its image abroad, said the scandal has no connection with the murders of Dr and Mrs. Robert Smit.

"Any inference that there is a connection between the two would be totally wrong," a spokesman for Botha said.

As the influence-buying scandal unfolded in South Africa in recent weeks, Botha vowed to resign and call new national elections if it was proven that anyone in his cabinet was involved.

Rhoodie, who is hiding in Europe from the South African authorities, said in the BBC interview that he also had "safely locked away in a bank vault somewhere in Europe" another "massive document" detailing all the "secret projects over the past five years, including current projects," in which South African money was spent to buy foreign support.

He said this document contained "a summary of the projects, including who received what and the names of people in the
